

A COMMUNITARIAN THEORY OF WTO LAW

Since 1995 there has been intense debate about whether the World Trade Organization (WTO) Agreement is just. Many observers point to the association of the treaty with intensive interdependence and the disruptive effects of globalization to assert that it is unjust, particularly when viewed from the perspective of human rights.

Nevertheless, justice in sovereign terms is different from justice in human terms. This book puts forward a theory of WTO law to explain the difference. The theory explains how economic interdependence gives rise to an interactive view of the relationship between different forms of justice and generates interdependent obligations under WTO law.

In an era of fresh concern about interdependence, however, the international trading system appears to be uncoupling. The theory's emphasis on interdependence accounts for the way in which this development is happening and how in response the WTO Agreement appears to be evolving away from a constitutive framework towards something more contractual. In the meantime, the theory also suggests how WTO dispute settlement might have continuing relevance as a locus for transformative solutions to international economic problems.

Taken together, the theory's insights may assist in outlining a general theory of law.

CHIOS CARMODY is Associate Professor at the University of Western Ontario Faculty of Law in London, Ontario, Canada. He currently teaches courses in International Trade Law, Public International Law and Contracts. He has been Canadian National Director of the Canada-United States Law Institute since 2002.

CAMBRIDGE STUDIES IN INTERNATIONAL AND COMPARATIVE LAW: 181

Established in 1946, this series produces high quality, reflective and innovative scholarship in the field of public international law. It publishes works on international law that are of a theoretical, historical, cross-disciplinary or doctrinal nature. The series also welcomes books providing insights from private international law, comparative law and transnational studies which inform international legal thought and practice more generally.

The series seeks to publish views from diverse legal traditions and perspectives, and of any geographical origin. In this respect it invites studies offering regional perspectives on core problématiques of international law, and in the same vein, it appreciates contrasts and debates between diverging approaches. Accordingly, books offering new or less orthodox perspectives are very much welcome. Works of a generalist character are greatly valued and the series is also open to studies on specific areas, institutions or problems. Translations of the most outstanding works published in other languages are also considered.

After seventy years, Cambridge Studies in International and Comparative Law sets the standard for international legal scholarship and will continue to define the discipline as it evolves in the years to come.

Series Editors

Larissa van den Herik

Professor of Public International Law, Grotius Centre for International Legal Studies, Leiden University

Jean d'Aspremont

Professor of International Law, University of Manchester and Sciences Po Law School

A list of books in the series can be found at the end of this volume.

A COMMUNITARIAN THEORY OF WTO LAW

CHIOS CARMODY
University of Western Ontario

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge University Press & Assessment
978-0-521-87900-2 — A Communitarian Theory of WTO Law
Chios Carmody
Frontmatter
More Information

Shaftesbury Road, Cambridge CB2 8EA, United Kingdom
One Liberty Plaza, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10006, USA
477 Williamstown Road, Port Melbourne, VIC 3207, Australia
314–321, 3rd Floor, Plot 3, Splendor Forum, Jasola District Centre, New Delhi – 110025, India
103 Penang Road, #05–06/07, Visioncrest Commercial, Singapore 238467

Cambridge University Press is part of Cambridge University Press & Assessment, a department of the University of Cambridge.

We share the University's mission to contribute to society through the pursuit of education, learning and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521879002

DOI: 10.1017/9780511843280

© Chios Carmody 2024

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press & Assessment.

First published 2024

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Names: Carmody, Chios, author.

Title: A communitarian theory of WTO law / by Chios Carmody.

Other titles: Communitarian theory of World Trade Organization law

Description: Cambridge, United Kingdom ; New York, NY : Cambridge University Press, 2023. |
Series: Cambridge studies in international and comparative law | Includes bibliographical references and index.

Identifiers: LCCN 2022056921 | ISBN 9780521879002 (hardback)

Subjects: LCSH: World Trade Organization. | World Trade Organization. | Foreign trade regulation.

Classification: LCC K4610 .C365 2023 | DDC 382/.92–dc23/eng/20230403

LC record available at <https://lcn.loc.gov/2022056921>

ISBN 978-0-521-87900-2 Hardback

Cambridge University Press & Assessment has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

For my parents
Zoë Chios Carmody (1939–) and George Richard Carmody (1938–2011),
who sought a better world

We are people because of other people.

Tswana proverb

CONTENTS

List of Figures	x
Preface	xi
Acknowledgments	xiv
1 A Theory of WTO Law	1
1.1 Why a Theory?	1
1.2 The Outline of a Theory	4
1.2.1 A Theory of Community	5
1.2.2 A Theory of Justice	9
1.2.3 A Theory of Law	17
1.3 Of Relationships and a System	24
1.4 A Theory as Theory	28
1.5 The Structure of This Book	46
1.6 Conclusion	48
2 The WTO Agreement as Community	55
2.1 A Theory of Community	55
2.2 GATT 1947 and the WTO Agreement	60
2.2.1 GATT 1947	60
2.2.2 The WTO Agreement	66
2.3 Text and Context	76
2.4 On Interdependence	91
2.5 A Great Uncoupling	96
2.6 Conclusion	106
3 The WTO Agreement and Justice	108
3.1 The Nature of Justice	108
3.2 Theories of Justice	112
3.2.1 Equality and Fairness	113
3.2.2 Justice in New Forms	119
3.2.3 A Communitarian Theory	122
3.3 The WTO Agreement and Justice	134
3.3.1 Distributive Justice	144

3.3.2	Corrective Justice	154
3.3.3	Transformative Justice	166
3.4	Beyond Transformation	178
3.4.1	Perfect Justice	179
3.4.2	Global Justice	184
3.4.3	Compliance	189
3.4.4	Legitimacy	191
3.5	Justice: A Communitarian Idea	194
4	The WTO Agreement as a Law of Obligations		198
4.1	Introduction	198
4.2	A Law of Equality	199
4.3	A Law of Obligation	203
4.3.1	A Law of Obligations	203
4.3.2	A Constitutive Law	230
4.3.3	A Law of the Future	240
4.3.4	A Deductive Law	245
4.4	Conclusion	253
5	The WTO Agreement as a Law of Rights		256
5.1	Introduction	256
5.2	A Law of Fairness	258
5.3	A Law of Right	265
5.3.1	A Law of Rights	265
5.3.2	A Contractual Law	296
5.3.3	A Law of the Past	303
5.3.4	An Inductive Law	307
5.4	Nonviolation	313
5.5	Implementation	318
5.6	Conclusion	322
6	The WTO Agreement as a Sui Generis Legal System		326
6.1	Introduction	326
6.2	A Just Law	328
6.3	A Legal System	335
6.3.1	A Sui Generis Legal System	336
6.3.2	A Contractual Constitution	342
6.3.3	A Law of the Present	347
6.3.4	An Abductive Reasoning	352
6.4	Transforming the Law	358
6.4.1	Correlation	359
6.4.2	Subordination	360
6.4.3	Transition	361
6.4.4	Integration	364

CONTENTS

ix

6.4.5	Transformation and Idea-Complexes	366
6.5	Conclusion	368
7	A Communitarian Theory and International Investment Law	370
7.1	Introduction	370
7.2	An International Law of Investment	374
7.2.1	Fair and Equitable Treatment (FET)	379
7.2.2	Full Protection and Security (FPS)	382
7.2.3	Arbitrary or Discriminatory Behavior	383
7.2.4	National Treatment (NT)	384
7.2.5	MFN Treatment	385
7.2.6	Expropriation	387
7.2.7	Necessity and Fundamental Change of Circumstances	388
7.2.8	Appraisal	389
7.3	Law and Investment	390
7.3.1	Doing Fairness	392
7.3.2	Rights Redux	401
7.3.3	A Contractual Ethos	406
7.3.4	Looking Back	412
7.3.5	Induction and Empiricism	415
7.4	A Lesser Unification	419
7.5	Conclusion	426
8	Some Concluding Thoughts	428
8.1	A Substantive Theory	428
8.2	A General Theory?	434
8.3	Some Unanswered Questions	439
8.4	Theory in the Anthropocene	443
8.5	WTO: Predictions and Prescriptions	450
8.6	Conclusion: Biology as Ideology	460
	Bibliography	461
	Index	487

FIGURES

- 1.1 A communitarian theory outline 5
- 1.2 A theory of community 8
- 1.3 A theory of community and justice 12
- 1.4 The structure of justice 16
- 1.5 A communitarian theory of law (preliminary) 23
- 1.6 A communitarian theory of law 25
- 2.1 The WTO dispute settlement system 70
- 2.2 WTO organizational structure 77
- 3.1 The structure of justice 128

PREFACE

Can you see anything? . . .
Yes, wonderful things.¹

This book puts forward a theory of the law of the World Trade Organization (WTO). It began with my doctoral dissertation on remedies in WTO law at Georgetown University Law Center in 1997–2001, which was a short, hurried piece of work I was dissatisfied with.

A remedy is traditionally given by a court or tribunal to correct an injury. However, the remedial formula set out in Art. 19.1 of the WTO Dispute Settlement Understanding (DSU) simply recommends that a WTO member country found to be non-compliant with the WTO Agreement bring its laws “into conformity” with its commitments under the treaty. Such a formula seemed too cryptic and open-ended to be completely corrective.

At the time there was a lot of interest in DSU provisions, which provide for the possibility of countermeasures should a defendant country be unable to bring itself into immediate compliance with the WTO Agreement. In WTO dispute settlement a successful complainant country is given the option of negotiating temporary compensation if immediate withdrawal of the impugned measure is impracticable. If compensation cannot be agreed, then as a “last resort” the complainant is permitted to selectively close its market to the defendant by temporarily suspending concessions or other obligations.

Commentators were intrigued by the possibility of countermeasures since they seemed to fulfill a long-held desire to make international law more afflictive, and, to that extent, presumably more effective. There was a lot written about countermeasures under the DSU and some early WTO litigation involving them in cases such as EC – Bananas III and EC – Hormones.

¹ Remarks between the archeologist Howard Carter and his patron, George Herbert, Earl of Carnavon, on Carter’s initial glimpse into the tomb of Tutankhamun, Pharaoh of Egypt (reigned 1334–1325 BCE) in the Valley of the Kings, December 1922. Howard Carter & A. C. Mace, The Tomb of Tutankhamen. 35 (Barrie & Jenkins, London; 1972).

Still, the enormous attention devoted to countermeasures seemed to me to obscure the deeper pattern of what was happening in WTO law. As time passed it became apparent that rather than retaliating against each other, WTO member countries were using individual disputes or groups of disputes to work out accommodative solutions. These solutions were often arrived at obliquely and elicited only intermittent attention in commentary but in my thinking they were evidence of a creative, flexible legal system at work.

I struggled for several years to find some way of rationalizing this facilitative role as the ultimate purpose of remedies under the WTO Agreement. There seemed to be no easy way to explain it.

This, then, was the genesis for the theory set out in this book. It began in an effort to explain the peculiar shape of remedies in WTO dispute settlement.

At the same time, there were a number of other themes that attracted my interest. One was interdependence. Interdependence has always been important in human and international affairs. At the end of the Cold War, however, the inclination to depend on others for economic benefit appeared to go into overdrive. Immense, highly sophisticated supply and value chains emerged that spanned the globe and wove together producers and consumers. I wondered how this intensive reliance might condition the legal engagements entered into under the WTO Agreement and influence its remedies.

I was also interested in the shape of WTO obligations. In an exchange with Joost Pauwelyn in the European Journal of International Law in 2003–2006, Pauwelyn suggested that WTO obligations are fundamentally bilateral and “private” since they are about “trade” between pairs of countries.² He made reference to the bilateral way in which trade concessions are negotiated, to the bilateral form of much WTO dispute settlement and to the apparent consistency of certain WTO rules with leading restatements of international law concerning bilateral obligations.

In response I made the opposite case.³ I referred to the way in which a key feature of the WTO Agreement – arguably its most important innovation – is nondiscrimination obligations that make one WTO member country extend trade concessions and commitments “immediately and unconditionally” to the entire WTO membership. These effectively create a “public” good in the special and limited sense of the WTO membership as a relevant “public.” I backed up my position by referring to the way in which certain features of WTO law are more consistent with classic descriptions of multilateral obligations in international law.

² Joost Pauwelyn, “A Typology of Multilateral Treaty Obligations” 14:5 E.J.I.L. 907 (2003).

³ Chios Carmody, “WTO Obligations as Collective” 17:2 E.J.I.L. 419 (2006).

Nevertheless, on that occasion my ultimate conclusion was that WTO obligations are not purely bilateral or multilateral. Instead, they can be identified as “interdependent,” an intermediate category of obligation wherein the relationship is not one-to-one as in bilateral obligations, nor one-to-all as in multilateral obligations, but one-to-some.

The interdependent label seemed to be consistent both with the way that the obligations arose (i.e. through the interdependence of states and economic operators) and the way that WTO member behavior is in fact carefully calibrated to the behavior of other WTO members, particularly major ones. Over time this identification seemed to offer a particularly accurate description of what was happening under the WTO Agreement as intensive interdependence exposed certain vulnerabilities and the possibility of its “weaponization,” and how in response, certain member states appeared to be “dialing back” their WTO obligations.

Finally, I was interested in whether or not any link or connection could be drawn between my observations about WTO law and those pertaining to classic Aristotelian ideas of corrective and distributive justice.

Eventually, I came to the conclusion that WTO remedies are broad and open-ended because the law is chiefly distributive and obligation-oriented. Its aim is to ensure the equal distribution of expectations of market access ex ante rather than the fair correction of trade injury ex post. This is for the greater purpose of facilitating interdependence. In the intervening years, however, experience has exposed what amounts to a crisis of faith in the value of interdependence, with the result that the community of the WTO Agreement now appears to be decoupling.

Again, I searched for a plausible way to fit these features of the law together. The most appropriate way to do so appeared to be to devise a theory. The result is what is outlined in succeeding chapters.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

To see is itself a creative operation, requiring an effort.¹

Henri Matisse's words above convey something of the effort it has been to "see" both the theory and its operation in WTO law and write this book.

The book would not have been completed without the insight and encouragement of many people. Several deserve special mention.

I am grateful to the late John Jackson (1932–2015), who taught for many years at the University of Michigan Law School before moving to Georgetown University Law Center in 1998. John was my doctoral supervisor at Georgetown and originally directed me toward the subject of remedies in WTO law as a thesis topic. I am thankful for his direction and insight.

Frieder Roessler, formerly Legal Advisor to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and subsequently Executive Director of the Advisory Centre for WTO Law (ACWL), was also an inspiration. Frieder gave a course on WTO law that I attended at Georgetown Law in the fall of 1997. His approach was very clear and systematic, and as a result, I began to wonder if it might be possible to outline a system of ideas in the form of a theory to describe WTO law as a whole.

Another person to whom I owe great thanks is Peter Gerhart at Case Western Reserve University School of Law. Peter is a wonderfully rigorous thinker, who has written several books on legal theory himself.² In an exchange in 2000 he was the first person to suggest that rather than characterize WTO obligations as "either/or" – that is, as either bilateral or multilateral – they might have a dual nature.

¹ Henri Matisse in Hilary Spurling, The Unknown Matisse, xx (Knopf, New York; 1998)

² See Peter Gerhart, Tort Law and Social Morality (2010); Peter Gerhart, Property Law and Social Morality (2013); Peter Gerhart, Contract Law and Social Morality (2022).

I would also like to make special mention of my father, George Carmody (1938–2011), a geneticist who taught for several decades at Carleton University. In a discussion with him in March 2005 I related Gerhart’s observation about the dual nature of WTO obligations. My father suggested to me that what arises in the treaty isn’t a dualism so much as a hybrid. He insisted that I would have to derive a series of “third” values arising from the interaction and interdependence of the various elements of the hybrid. I proceeded to follow his suggestion, which provided the framework outlined in Fig. 1.6 and the essential structure of this monograph.

In addition, there are a number of other people to acknowledge.

I am very grateful to Cherise Valles of the ACWL, who organized a mini-symposium on an early version of the ideas outlined in my response to Pauwelyn in 2005. The symposium was an opportunity to obtain valuable feedback and convinced me that a more complete exposition of the ideas involved was feasible.

Over the years I have also had the opportunity to present portions of my thinking on a number of occasions. I must thank the late Karen Knop, Valerie Hughes, Samuli Seppänen, Martin Björklund, Susan Karamanian, Jeff Dunoff, Sungjoon Cho, Changfa Lo, Shin-yi Peng, Christopher Parlin, Arman Savarian, Filippo Fontanelli, Antonio Segura Serrano, Lisa Toohey, Gillian Moon, Joanna Gomula, Stephan Wittich, Debra Steger and Don McRae. I must also thank Emilia Porges and Tomer Broude for inviting me to present a synopsis of this work at the American Society of International Law (ASIL) International Economic Law Research Colloquium in 2009. Later that same year I was also able to meet with Sanne Taekema to discuss the role of ideals in law. Sanne’s book The Concept of Ideals in Legal Theory (2003) was formative in developing my thinking concerning the role of equality and fairness as “master ideals” of justice. I am also grateful to Francine MacKenzie of Western University’s History Department, who provided a useful historical overview of GATT and the WTO Agreement, and to Todd Weiler and Paul Moën for their insights and occasional humor. Americo Beviglia Zampetti kindly provided me with an advance copy of his book, Fairness in the World Economy (2006), as did Ronnie R.F. Yearwood of The Interaction between World Trade Organization (WTO) and External International Law (2011). I deeply appreciate their unconditional willingness to share their work.

Drafts of the first chapter were written while I was on sabbatical at the Jean Monnet Center, New York University (NYU), in 2005–2006. I am very grateful to the Center's Director, Joseph Weiler, for making my stay there possible and for offering me the opportunity to present some of my ideas in the context of the Center's seminar series. On that occasion Eyal Benvenisti and Armin von Bogdandy provided insightful feedback. Rebecca Laforgia also visited me at NYU one sunny day in April 2006 and buoyed me with her insight and enthusiasm for this project.

I am also grateful for a second sabbatical leave spent at the University of Toronto Faculty of Law in 2012–2013, where the middle chapters of this book began to take shape. During that time Associate Dean Ian Lee and his successor in post, Jim Phillips, as well as Jutta Brunnée, graciously extended the Faculty's resources to me.

At the Canada–United States Law Institute, the late Richard Cunningham (1942–2021) and Lawrence Herman – as well as my fellow Institute directors Steve Petras, Ted Parran and Michael Scharf – have been tremendous colleagues and steadfast in their support for this work.

I am most thankful to Maureen Irish and Stephen Pitel, who read the entire manuscript and offered comments, and to a number of others who offered to read chapters and did the same, including Joanna Langille, Petros Mavroidis, Graham Cook, Gabrielle Marceau, Asif Qureshi, Shai Dothan and Joanna Gomula. They have been excellent debaters and friends, as has been the late Armand de Mestral. Michael Byers kindly put me in touch with Philip Allott, who was very hospitable, welcoming me to Cambridge for a day in June 2010 to discuss legal theory and some of the ideas contained in the developing manuscript.

At Cambridge University Press I am thankful to John Berger, Jackie Grant, Tom Randall and Gemma Smith, who were very patient with me during the long years of writing and who shepherded the manuscript through the editorial process with dispatch once it was received. Annerufina Raymond and Marijasintha Jacob Srinivasan at Straive were exemplars of patience and useful advice. I also benefitted greatly from comments supplied by two unidentified reviewers at the review stage.

At the University of Western Ontario Faculty of Law I am particularly grateful to several people. Dean Ian Holloway, QC, and his two successors, Iain Scott and Erika Chamberlain, gave me the valuable opportunity to teach and conduct research in international law, something that enabled me to develop the focus necessary for a book of this type. Their generosity and that of the University's research arm, Research Western, afforded me a number of opportunities to travel in order to present ideas and test out my thinking. I am also very grateful for funding from the Law Foundation of Ontario over several summers to hire student research assistants, including Peter Kucherepa, Janice Ho, Ryan Brown, Michelle Dekens, Michael Kelly and Alexander Will. They helped considerably in several phases of this work.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

xvii

More generally, I would like to thank Western Law colleagues, who have provided support and encouragement in countless ways as the manuscript moved forward: Stephen Pitel, Dale Ives, Jason Neyers, Rande Kostal, Valerie Oosterveld, Sara Seck, Margaret Martin, the late Tim Edgar, Randal Graham, Michael Coyle, Zoë Sinel, Melanie Randall, Joanna Langille and Ryan Liss. I am proud to work with such fine colleagues. They inspire me daily with their commitment to excellence in legal education and research.

I must add that a strong, well-financed system of public education is a tremendous asset, one vital to the creation of community. I must therefore thank the people and government of Ontario for their continuing support of my institution and others like it.

I would be remiss if I implied that anyone above is responsible for any errors found in this book. Those are wholly my own.

Chios Carmody
London, Ontario
1 August 2023