ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book has taken much longer to complete and has involved many more travails than I had ever expected. Along the way, I have tested the patience of more than one Literary Editor at the Royal Historical Society. I especially owe Aled Jones a great many thanks for his continued support and encouragement. Thank you, Aled. At the Royal Historical Society, David Eastwood was the first to help move this project forward, while Jon Lawrence has finally seen it through to completion. During the publication process, Hester Higton acted as a friendly and expert guide through the sometimes awkward problems presented by the formatting and copy-editing of Place's diary.

Many people offered helpful advice along the way, answered frantic questions, or shared some of their time and knowledge with me. I offer many, many thanks to these people for their time, aid, and friendship: Gregory Claeys, Ruth Paley, Marc Steinberg, Bob Storch, Mary Thale, Joel Wiener, and, at my home institution, Seth Meisel, Becky Hogan, and Mary Pinkerton. I also could not have completed this project without the yeoman (and yeo-woman) help of Joe Jacquess and Terry Hering of the interlibrary loan staff at the Andersen Library who secured for me innumerable obscure articles from around the world. No project such as this one could have been completed without the indirect help of the many British historians who contributed to the new Oxford Dictionary of National Biography. Their immense work is reflected in the footnotes of this book. Malcolm Chase deserves special thanks for giving both of his time and expertise in the field of labor history not only to help me finish this project, but also in trying to keep that field alive. Finally, a special note of thanks to Howard Ross, former Dean of the College of Arts and Science at the University of Wisconsin-Whitewater, who managed to extend absolutely essential financial assistance necessary to complete this project.

Work on this book, unfortunately, coincided with both a personal and domestic crisis. To all of those who stuck by me and helped me weather the storm, as it were, I offer my heartfelt thanks and gratitude. John Lombardo, drummer extraordinaire, was there in the coffee shop every Monday morning at 9:00 a.m. to listen to my complaints and lamentations. My parents were simply wonderful and supportive. To those I hurt, I offer my most sincere apologies. I hope you find what you want and need. To my fantastic children, Olwen and Max, I offer my love and this book.
