

Discovering Medieval Song

The conductus repertory is the body of monophonic and polyphonic non-liturgical Latin song that dominated European culture from the middle of the twelfth century to the beginning of the fourteenth. In this book, Mark Everist demonstrates how the poetry and music interact, explores how musical structures are created and discusses the geographical and temporal reach of the genre, including its significance for performance today. The volume studies what medieval society thought of the conductus, its function in medieval society – whether paraliturgical or in other contexts – and how it fitted into patristic and secular Latin cultures. The conductus emerges as a genre of great poetic and musical sophistication that brought the skills of poets and musicians into alignment. This book provides an all-encompassing view of an important but unexplored repertory of medieval music, engaging with both poetry and music even-handedly to present new and up-to-date perspectives on the genre.

MARK EVERIST is Professor of Music at the University of Southampton and is the author of books including French Motets in the Thirteenth Century (Cambridge, 1994) and Mozart's Ghosts: Haunting the Halls of Musical Culture (2013). He is co-editor of Analytical Strategies and Musical Interpretation (Cambridge, 1996) and of The Cambridge History of Medieval Music (Cambridge, 2018) as well as editor of The Cambridge Companion to Medieval Music (Cambridge, 2011). His recent collected essays on music in the French nineteenth-century theatre will be published in 2018. His current project is a monograph on Gluck reception in nineteenth-century Paris. He was President of the Royal Musical Association from 2011 to 2017.

Discovering Medieval Song

Latin Poetry and Music in the Conductus

---

MARK EVERIST

University of Southampton

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge University Press

978-1-009-07497-1 — Discovering Medieval Song: Latin Poetry and Music in the Conductus

Mark Everist

Frontmatter

More Information

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

University Printing House, Cambridge CB2 8BS, United Kingdom

One Liberty Plaza, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10006, USA

477 Williamstown Road, Port Melbourne, VIC 3207, Australia

314-321, 3rd Floor, Plot 3, Splendor Forum, Jasola District Centre, New Delhi - 110025, India

103 Penang Road, #05-06/07, Visioncrest Commercial, Singapore 238467

Cambridge University Press is part of the University of Cambridge.

It furthers the University's mission by disseminating knowledge in the pursuit of education, learning and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9781009074971

DOI: 10.1017/9780511852138

© Mark Everist 2018

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2018

First paperback edition 2021

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

ISBN 978-1-107-01039-0 Hardback

ISBN 978-1-009-07497-1 Paperback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication, and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-009-07497-1 — Discovering Medieval Song: Latin Poetry and Music in the Conductus

Mark Everist

Frontmatter

More Information

---

For Jeanice and Amelia

Contents

List of Illustrations page [viii]

List of Tables [x]

List of Music Examples [xi]

Acknowledgements [xv]

Note to the Text [xvii]

Introduction: Repositioning the Conductus [xix]

1 Repertories, Chronology and Style [1]

2 Poetic and Lyric Types: Words and Music [48]

3 Rhythm and Metre: Editing and Performance [91]

4 Cadential Functions: Gesture and Closure [127]

5 The Mixed Form: Architecture and Structure [151]

6 The Conductus and the Liturgy [181]

7 The Conductus and Motet [214]

8 The Conductus: Intratexts and Intertexts [241]

9 Towards 1300 [280]

Conclusion [309]

Appendices [312]

List of Compositions [312]

2.1 List of Topical and Datable Compositions [325]

4.1 Distribution and Function of Punctus Organi Within Conducti cum Caudis in I-Fl Plut. 29.1, Fascicle Seven [327]

5.1 Transcription of ‘Floret hortus virginalis.’ I-Fl Plut. 29.1 371r–371v [331]

5.2 Transcription of ‘Luget Rachel iterum.’ I-Fl Plut. 29.1, 359v–360r [335]

Bibliography [338]

Index [375]

Figures

- 1.1 ‘Omnis in lacrimas’: facsimile, I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 415v page [9]
- 3.1 Opening of *‘Dic Christi veritas’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 203r, bottom half [92]
- 3.2 Opening of *‘Dic Christi veritas’; E-SAu 226, fol. 100v, bottom left quadrant [93]
- 3.3 Opening of *‘Dic Christi veritas’; *D-Sl H.B.I.Asc.*95, fol. 33v, top half [94]
- 3.4 *‘Qui seminant in lacrimis’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 425r [99]
- 3.5 ‘Iam vetus littera’, extract; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 273r [100]
- 3.6 ‘Veri vitis germine’, extract; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 270r, system 3 [101]
- 3.7 ‘Christo psallat ecclesia’; Guido Maria Dreves, ed., Lieder und Motetten des Mittelalters, 2 vols., Analecta hymnica medii aevi 20–21 (Leipzig: O.R. Reisland, 1895) 2:213 [105]
- 3.8 ‘Eclipsim patitur’; Guido Maria Dreves, ed., Lieder und Motetten des Mittelalters, 2 vols., Analecta hymnica medii aevi 20–21 (Leipzig: O.R. Reisland, 1895) 2: 210–211 [106]
- 3.9 ‘Procurans odium’; Janet Knapp, ‘Musical Declamation and Poetic Rhythm in an Early Layer of Notre-Dame Conductus’, Journal of the American Musicological Society 32 (1979) 396 [117]
- 5.1 Distribution of caudae in ‘Floret hortus virginalis’ [161]
- 5.2 Contents of F-Pn lat. 14759 [168]
- 5.3 Distribution of caudae in ‘Luget Rachel iterum’ [176]
- 7.1 (783) ‘Salve virgo rubens’ – ‘Neuma’ (Neuma I); I-Bc Q 11, fols. 7v–8 [217]
- 8.1 Heinrich Husmann’s comparison of two passages from ‘Sursum corda elevate’; ‘Zur Grundlegung der musikalischen Rhythmik des mittelalterlichen Liedes’, Archiv für Musikwissenschaft 9 (1952) 14 [242]
- 9.1a ‘Nulli beneficium’ from F-Pn fr. 146, fol. 7v [285]
- 9.1b ‘Nulli beneficium’ from I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 334r [286]
- 9.2a *‘Transgressus legem Domini’ from I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 214r [288]
- 9.2b *‘Transgressus legem Domini’ from D-HEu 2588, fol. 5r [289]

- 9.3 F-ME 732 bis/20, fol. 2r, transmission of ‘Ego reus confiteor’
(first three systems) [291]
- 9.4 E-Bulh 9, fol. 137r, transmission of ‘Columbe simplicitas’ [293]
- 9.5 I-Bc Q 11 transmission of *‘Beata viscera’ [306]

Tables

- 1.1 Relationship between stanzaic structure and number of voice parts in the conductus repertory page [7]
- 1.2 Philip the Chancellor's poetry with polyphonic music [45]
- 2.1 Conducti that make use of the 'Dic: "Iube Dom[i]ne"' formula [52]
- 2.2 Conductus rubrics in the Sens New Year Feast [57]
- 2.3 Typology of poetic subject in the Conductus [63]
- 2.4 Conductus poems based on hagiographical subjects [65]
- 4.1 Statistical distribution of conductus cum caudis and punctus organi in the seventh fascicle of I-Fl Plut. 29.1 [144]
- 6.1 Distribution of caudae in 'Ave Maria gratia plena' I–IV [185]
- 6.2 Analysis of poetry of 'Sursum corda elevate' and sources [190]
- 6.3 The conductus and the 'Benedicamus Domino' [200]
- 7.1 Manuscripts with motets in score format [215]
- 7.2 Conducti repurposed in the Roman de Fauvel, F-Pn fr. 146 [226]
- 7.3 Motets notated as conducti in D-W 628 [233]
- 7.4 Motets notated as conducti in E-Mn 20486 [234]
- 7.5 Table of contents of F-CECad 3. J. 250 [236]
- 8.1 Conducti and contrafacta [255]
- 8.2 Manuscripts that preserve polyphonic conducti with just their poetry [263]
- 8.3 Manuscripts preserving monophonic reductions of polyphonic conducti [266]
- 9.1 Contents of I-Bc Q 11, folios 5–8 (Hand D) [305]

Music Examples

- 1.1 ‘Omnis in lacrimas’ stanza 1 edition and facsimile; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 415v page [10]
- 1.2 (a and b) Comparison of opening melismas of *‘A globo veteri’ and *‘Olim sudor Herculis’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 446v and fol. 417r [35]
- 1.3 Text and translation of ‘Rex et sacerdos prefuit’ [39]
- 1.4 (a–c) Comparison of opening of three stanzas of ‘Rex et sacerdos prefuit’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fols 435v–436 [41]
- 1.5 Last line of third stanza of ‘Rex et sacerdos prefuit’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 436r [41]
- 1.6 Second stanza of ‘Rex et sacerdos prefuit’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 436r [42]
- 1.7 Edition of first stanza of *‘Excudere de pulvere’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 426r [44]
- 1.8 Comparison of texts of stanzas 1 and 3 of ‘Centrum capit circulus’ and ‘Regis decus et regine’ [46]
- 2.1 Text and translation of ‘Columbe simplicitas’ [50]
- 2.2 Text and translation of last two stanzas (3 and 4) of ‘Orientis partibus’; E-Mn 289, fol. 147r [54]
- 2.3 Text and translation of first stanza of *‘Naturas Deus regulis’ and corresponding passage from The Abingdon Chronicle [60]
- 2.4 Text and translation of *‘Olim sudor Herculis’, stanza 1 and refrain [68]
- 2.5 Analysis of *‘Olim sudor Herculis’ against labours of Hercules [68]
- 2.6 *‘Dic Christi veritas’: text, translation and literary sources [71]
- 2.7 Text and Translation of *‘Ut non ponam’, stanza 1 [75]
- 2.8 *‘Ut non ponam’, music to last two lines of poetry and cauda (I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fols 350r–350v) [77]
- 2.9 Text and translation of ‘Si Deus est animus’ [79]
- 2.10 Edition of ‘Si Deus est animus’ (I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 352r) [80]
- 3.1 Triplum of *‘Dic Christi veritas’, first five longae trium temporum [95]
- 3.2 Duplum of ‘Puer nobis est natus’, melisma from first stanza [96]

- 3.3 ‘Pater noster qui es in celis’; extract from Gordon A. Anderson, ed., Notre-Dame and Related Conductus: Opera omnia, 11 vols. [Institute of Mediaeval Music] Collected Works 10 (Henryville, Ottawa, and Binningen: Institute of Mediaeval Music, 1979–) [all but vol. 7 and 11 have appeared], 3:7, followed by an alternative transcription without barlines from I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 215r [97]
- 3.4 Two short caudae from ‘Iam vetus littera’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 273r [101]
- 3.5 ‘Veri vitis germinet’, second stanza: extract showing alternation of musica cum and sine littera [102]
- 3.6 Transcription of extract of ‘Procurans odium’ from I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 226r [118]
- 3.7 *‘Quo vadis quo progredieris’: Text and translation [123]
- 3.8 *‘Quo vadis quo progredieris’; transcription of opening of first stanza from I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 428v [124]
- 3.9 *‘Quo vadis quo progredieris’; comparative transcription of opening of first and second stanzas from I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 428v [124]
- 4.1a Typical punctus organi illustrated from end of ‘Beatus servus sapiens’ with indications of obligatory and optional characteristics, I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 366r [129]
- 4.1b Contrapuntal summary of punctus organi in Example 4.1a [129]
- 4.2 End of second stanza of ‘O crux ave spes unica’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 347r [130]
- 4.3 End of ‘Qui de Saba veniunt’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 316r [130]
- 4.4 Extract from ‘Age penitentiam’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 340v [131]
- 4.5 Extract from ‘Dum sigillum summi patris’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 344v [132]
- 4.6 Extract from ‘Sedit angelus’ V. ‘Crucifixum in carne’ (O 9); I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 71r [134]
- 4.7 Extract from ‘Cristus resurgens’ V. ‘Dicant nunc Iudei’ (O 8); I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 70v [135]
- 4.8a End of ‘Salvatoris hodie’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1 fol. 202r [141]
- 4.8b Contrapuntal summary of two lowest voices at end of ‘Salvatoris hodie’. [142]
- 4.9 Extract from ‘Magnificat anima mea’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 301v [146]
- 4.10 Extract from ‘Consequens antecedente’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 327r [147]

- 4.11 Opening of ‘De nature fracto iure’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 303v [148]
- 5.1 Cauda III of ‘Floret hortus virginalis’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 371r [164]
- 5.2 First two caudae of ‘Luget Rachel iterum’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 359v [177]
- 6.1 Edition of first stanza of ‘Sursum corda elevate’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fols 342v–342r [193]
- 6.2a Opening of conductus ‘O vera o pia’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 242v [196]
- 6.2b Opening of offertory trope ‘Ab hac familia’; D-W 628, fol. 209v [196]
- 6.2c Final melisma of offertory ‘Recordare, virgo mater’; Liber usualis missae et officii pro dominicis et festis I. vel II. Classis cum cantu gregoriano ex editione vaticana adamussim excerpto et rhythmicis signis in subsidium cantorum a Solesmensibus monachis diligenter ornato (Rome and Tournai: Desclée, 1920), 1442 [196]
- 6.3a Opening of kyrie trope ‘Kyrie celum creans’; GB-Lbl Egerton 274, fol. 92r [198]
- 6.3b Beginning of tenor of second melisma to ‘[Si membrana esset celum]’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fols 254r–254v; D-DS 3471, fol. 5v (the two versions are identical) [198]
- 6.3c Opening of tenor of ‘Donnez ma dame ai mon coeur tresdout’ – ‘Adies sunt ces sades brunetes’ – ‘Kyrie caelum’; F-MOfH 196, fol. 335r–335v [198]
- 6.4 End of ‘Deus creator omnium’ with plainsong indicated; D-W 628, fol. 132v [204]
- 7.1 (409) ‘Benedicta Marie virginis’ – (410) ‘Beate virginis fecondat’ – ‘Benedicta’ (M 32): edition of longae trium temporum 1–4; 65–68; 129–132; F-MOfH 196, fols 376v–377v [224]
- 8.1 ‘Sol sub nube latuit’, final texted section and beginning of final cauda; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 355r [243]
- 8.2 Openings of ‘*Olim sudor Herculis’ and ‘Excuset que vim intulit’; I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 417r and 419r [246]
- 8.3 Text and translation of ‘Dum medium silentium tenerent’ [275]
- 9.1 ‘Nulli beneficium’, F-Pn fr. 146, fol. 7v [287]
- 9.2 ‘*Transgressus legem Domini’ (‘huic mediante filio’) from I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol 214v and D-HEu 2588, fol. 5r [290]

- 9.3 Anderson's units 200–214 of third stanza of *'Transgressus legem Domini' [296]
- 9.4 'Ego reus confiteor', opening cauda, F-ME 732 bis/20, fol. 2r [297]
- 9.5 'Ego reus confiteor', 'Deum et proximum' to 'iudico', F-ME 732 bis/20, fol. 2r and I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 324v [298]
- 9.6 'Ego reus confiteor', 'Matri' to 'precibus', F-ME 732 bis/20, fol. 2v and I-Fl Plut. 29.1, fol. 324v [300]
- 9.7 'Entendez tuit ensemble'; F-Pn fr. 1536, fol. 247v and *'Beata viscera'; I-Fl Plut 29.1, fol. 422r [303]
- 9.8 *'Beata viscera'; I-Bc Q 11, fol. 5r [304]

Acknowledgements

Much of the thinking that underpins Discovering Medieval Song was formulated, refined, rejected and revised in the series of seminars that took place at the University of Southampton between 2011 and 2014 as part of the ‘CPI Cantum pulcriorem invenire’ project, and members of the project contributed greatly to the monograph. Gregorio Bevilacqua managed the database with such skill and efficiency that we were able to add in searchable texts of all 957 poems before the close of the project, thus providing a concordance to the entire repertory; he also worked on most of the performing materials for the recordings. He was assisted by Lena Wahlgren-Smith, who also acted as our resident medieval Latinist throughout the project and on the database, performing materials and just about every aspect of our work. PhD students Eva Maschke, Jacopo Mazzeo, Amy Williamson and Asher Yampolsky worked tirelessly not only on the work towards their own dissertations but also on critiquing arguments, acting as advocati diaboli on most occasions and working on performing materials as well as assistance with the database. Austin Glatthorn, an MMus student with the temerity to drift into the Music Seminar Room on Thursday afternoons, ended up setting all the music examples for Discovering Medieval Song. Amy Williamson prepared the lists of manuscripts and compositions and the general index, and undertook large amounts of editorial work on the volume with skill and good humour. Dan Smith was, and remains, a tireless presence during the construction of the database and its subsequent maintenance. The men who made the music come alive cannot be thanked enough: John Potter, Rogers Covey-Crump and Christopher O’Gorman gave up vast amounts of their time and contributed astonishing expertise during the workshops, concerts and recordings that were crucial to the wider impact that this project continues to make. We were lucky to be supported by Simon Perry at Hyperion and by Delma Tomlin at the National Centre for Early Music where all the recordings were made. And our recordings would not have had the same polish and panache without the production skills of Jeremy Summerly and the engineering skills of Julian Millard. Work on the ‘CPI Cantum pulcriorem invenire’ project coincided with a remarkable renaissance of interest of music in the Ars

Antiqua, and much of this was enhanced by the work of Rob Wegman who not only set up one of the most active social media groups I know (1789 members at time of writing) but also ran the first of two conferences that brought together most of the world authorities on the music of the long thirteenth century (Princeton in 2011 and Southampton in 2013). Late in the day, I spent a pleasant afternoon in Philadelphia with graduate students from the University of Pennsylvania who read the final draft of the book and provided much-needed precision to some occasionally careless formulations. These events brought so many together, all of whom fed into Discovering Medieval Song in one way or another, but Rebecca Baltzer, Mary Caldwell, Helen Deeming and Thomas Payne have all been engaged in conversations about the conductus during the time I have been working on the subject. All will undoubtedly see the fruits of their discussions somewhere in the book. Tessa Webber kindly shared much material on her forthcoming work on lectio publica and engaged in endless but productive conversations that shaped much of the thinking in Chapter 2. In addition, Solomon Guhl-Miller, Bruce Holsinger, Peter Lefferts and Ernest Sanders read drafts of chapters and immeasurably increased their quality. I thank them all.

In Cambridge, Victoria Cooper commissioned the book, and Kate Brett took over the reins in its final stages. Lisa Sinclair managed operations. One could not wish for a better editorial team.

That's a lot of people, and working on Discovering Medieval Song has been a gregarious experience, with many individuals coming into and going out of the project at various times. But the people who have always been with it have been those who have had to discuss the subject at breakfast (well, sometimes), lunch and dinner and have tolerated my absences from home in support of the project. Amelia and Jeanice deserve far more than the mere dedication of this volume – and I'm sure at some point they will let me know exactly what 'far more' entails. I look forward to repaying my debts.

*Banister Park, Southampton,
St Vincent de Paul, Paris*

Note to the Text

All manuscripts are cited by their full shelf-mark at first occurrence in each chapter, thereafter abbreviated according to the conventional system employed by the Répertoire International des Sources Musicales (RISM).<sup>1</sup> Few issues seem to divide medievalists as much as the nomenclature of manuscript sources, and there will be many who will complain that Discovering Medieval Song prefers I-Fl Plut. 29.1 to F as the siglum for one of the sources most often discussed, now housed in Florence, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana. Such single-letter sigla worked perfectly when the subject was handling just a tiny number of large sources, but we now have to consider eight sources in Florence alone, and larger libraries – the Bibliothèque nationale de France – preserve simply dozens (not far short of a hundred, in fact), all of which require differentiation. Add to this that some single manuscripts have been given anything up to six sigla depending on which genre is being considered, then the use of a consistent set of sigla that are easy to decode on the spot without reference to the list in the Bibliography becomes essential. I just hope I have not lost too many friends in following this path.

Music examples are all edited afresh and follow the general guidelines and specific diacriticals outlined in the critical edition of the Magnus liber organi, produced under the general editorship of Edward Roesner during the 1990s and 2000s.<sup>2</sup> Although largely designed with organum in mind, these principles handle the same notational shapes employed in the conductus and are adopted here.

<sup>1</sup> Répertoire international des sources musicales: Online Catalogue of RISM Library Sigla, consulted 10 October 2016; www.rism.info/en/sigla.html

<sup>2</sup> Edward Roesner (ed.), Les Quadrupla et tripla de Paris, Le Magnus liber organi de Notre-Dame de Paris 1 (Monaco: Éditions de l'Oiseau-Lyre, 1993); Mark Everist (ed.), Les Organa à deux voix pour l'office du manuscrit de Florence, Biblioteca Medicea-Laurenziana, Plut. 29.1, Le Magnus liber organi de Notre Dame de Paris 2 (Monaco: Éditions de l'Oiseau Lyre, 2003); Everist (ed.), Les Organa à deux voix pour la messe (De Noël à la fête des Saints Pierre et Paul) du manuscrit de Florence, Biblioteca Medicea-Laurenziana, Plut. 29.1, Le Magnus liber organi de Notre Dame de Paris 3 (Monaco: Éditions de l'Oiseau Lyre, 2001); Everist (ed.), Les Organa à deux voix pour la messe (De l'Assomption au commun des saints) du manuscrit de Florence, Biblioteca Medicea-Laurenziana, Plut. 29.1, Le Magnus liber organi de Notre Dame de Paris 4 (Monaco: Éditions de l'Oiseau Lyre, 2002); Rebecca Baltzer (ed.), Les clausules à deux voix du manuscrit de Florence, Biblioteca Medicea-Laurenziana, Pluteus 29.1, fascicule V, Le Magnus liber organi de Notre-Dame de Paris 5 (Monaco: Éditions de l'Oiseau-Lyre, 1995); Thomas Payne (ed.), Les

In many cases, discussion of single works is aided by the use of modern transcriptions of the music, facsimiles of the original sources or both. Occasionally, however, it is necessary to attempt to give an overview of the structure and nature of a single conductus by means of an annotated text and commentary. Here the following conventions are used: italics indicate the presence of a cauda; bold face is used to show a punctus organi; italic bold face simply indicates the presence of both cauda and punctus organi in the setting of a single word or syllable. This leaves the convention of underscoring to indicate various sorts of parallels between different texts or parts of the same text. Chapter 4 depends on material published in ‘Tails of the Unexpected: The Punctus organi and the Conductus cum caudis’, Musik des Mittelalters und der Renaissance. Festschrift Klaus-Jürgen Sachs zum 80. Geburtstag, ed. Rainer Kleinertz and Wolf Frobenius, Veröffentlichungen des Staatlichen Instituts für Musikforschung (Berlin and Hildesheim: Olms, 2010), 161–195.

Organa à deux voix du manuscrit de Wolfenbüttel, Hertzog [sic] August Bibliothek, Cod. Guelf. 1099 Helmst, 2 vols., Le Magnus liber organi de Notre-Dame de Paris 6A-6B (Monaco: Éditions de l’Oiseau-Lyre, 1996); Roesner (ed.), Les Organa et les clausules à deux voix du manuscrit de Wolfenbüttel, Herzog August Bibliothek, Cod. Guelf. 628 Helmst, Le Magnus liber organi de Notre Dame de Paris 7 (Monaco: Éditions de l’Oiseau Lyre, 2009).

Introduction: Repositioning the Conductus

The title of this book, Discovering Medieval Song, loosely translates a line from music theory of the 1280s that describes the composition of the conductus<sup>1</sup>; its subtitle alludes more broadly to poetry and music in the Middle Ages, and more particularly to what might be called the ‘long’ thirteenth century, starting in the 1160s and ending sometime in the 1320s. For the study of music, this period encompasses the rise and fall of organum with all its subsidiary parts (clausula, copula, plainsong), rhymed offices, sequences, the development of the motet, measured notation, the emergence of polyphonic vernacular song, the work of most of the trouvères and troubadours and, perhaps most strikingly, the development of written tools to preserve this highly varied music in ways that make it possible for even the early twenty-first century to understand. But most of all, the long thirteenth century witnessed the growth of the conductus, which balanced Latin poetry and music in a way that no other type of composition attempted during the period.

Linear stories for the music of the long thirteenth century abound: Parisian organum emerged in the last third of the twelfth century at the hands of Leoninus, was developed by Perotinus in the very early years of the thirteenth and then was ‘superseded’ by the motet that appeared out of the clausulae embedded in organum. Polyphonic song surfaced as the result of a collision between registrally sophisticated trouvère poetry (the grand chant) and the mensural polyphony of the motet. However wrong these tales may be shown to be, and whichever one is told, the conductus seems to have limped along as very much a poor relation. Insofar as there exists any story behind the conductus, it is one that places the genre in the corner of the room occupied by the motet and organum, rather like the unloved stepchild at family celebrations in a Victorian novel. The conductus is made to hobble along more or less at the same time as organum and then the motet, only to disappear later in the thirteenth century.

<sup>1</sup> ‘Anyone who wishes to compose a conductus ought first to invent as beautiful a melody as he can’ (‘Qui vult facere conductum, primam cantum invenire debet pulcriorem quam potest’; Gilbert Reaney and André Gilles (eds.), Franconis de Colonia Ars cantus mensurabilis, Corpus scriptorum de musica 18 (n.p.: American Institute of Musicology, 1974) 73–74; translation from Oliver Strunk, Source Readings in Music History from Antiquity through the Romantic Era [New York: Norton, 1950] 155). The literal translation of invenire, used here, does not account for such wider, creative meanings as ‘find’ or ‘discover’.

This is a very strange view, wrong in terms of content and emphasis and misleading in terms of the relationship between the conductus and other musical and literary genres. Not only does the conductus represent a largely coherent repertory of music that aligns both Latin poetry and melody in ways in which organum and motet were never intended, but the sheer volume of the corpus is staggering. The field covered by Discovering Medieval Song includes 957 poems, of which 867 survive with music. Perhaps more significantly, the conductus is preserved in no fewer than 570 sources, spanning the mid-twelfth century to the end of the fourteenth, with some even later. The geographical spread of the conductus is similarly vast with no part of medieval Europe apparently immune to the attractions of the genre. And unlike organum and the motet, which genuinely seem to have originated in Paris and then radiated out all over Europe, the conductus was cultivated across the continent, and all Paris did was to provide an environment in which the repertory could be collected and, to an extent, codified. Also unlike organum and motet, the conductus enjoyed contributions from some of the best-known poets of the age – Philip the Chancellor, Peter of Blois, Gautier de Châtillon, for example – and the composer Perotinus, more famous for his composition of the four-voice organa, ‘Viderunt omnes’ and ‘Sederunt principes’, as well as three-part works and prosulae, contributed to the repertory of two-voice and monophonic conducti as well as to the variable-voice conductus.

Much of the lack of focus on the conductus may be the result of little more than the caprices of modern scholarship. Although Friedrich Ludwig, the pioneer of research in this field, catalogued many of the sources for the conductus in his monumental Repertorium, completed in 1910 (parts of which were not published until much later), his interests – as the rest of his title suggests – lay in ‘the most recent organa’ and ‘motets in the oldest style.’<sup>2</sup> The conductus – not forming part of the complex of plainsong, polyphony, retexting and recomposition that characterised organum and the motet – had to wait more than a quarter of a century for even a listing of the contents of some of the surviving manuscripts,<sup>3</sup> and no real study of the genre has been forthcoming until now.<sup>4</sup> But a more pressing reason for the relative neglect of the conductus is its different pattern of survival, perhaps indicating different patterns of medieval cultivation, which results in the repertory surviving in a large number of medieval sources, with a very few works in each manuscript. True, the so-called central sources of organum and – mostly – motet also include collections of conducti, and without these four sources (two in the Herzog-August Bibliothek in Wolfenbüttel, one in Madrid and the fourth in Florence) our picture of the repertory would be very different indeed.<sup>5</sup> But the vast number of sources, many of which contain the poetry of the conductus alone, are not only scattered all over Europe and beyond but were largely unknown to those who catalogued or commented on the conductus in the past.

<sup>2</sup> Friedrich Ludwig, Repertorium organorum recentioris et motetorum vetustissimi stili, 2 vols. (1 (1) – Halle: Verlag von Max Niemeyer, 1910; R [ed. Luther A. Dittmer, Musicological Studies 7] Brooklyn, NY: Institute of Mediaeval Music; Hildesheim: Georg Olms Verlagsbuchhandlung, 1964); (1 (2) – [345–456 ed. Friedrich Gennrich including R of ‘Die Quellen der Motetten ältesten Stils’, Archiv für Musikwissenschaft 5 (1923) 185–222 and 273–315, Summa musicae medii aevi 7] Langen bei Frankfurt: n.p., 1961; R [345–456], [457–783, ed. Luther A. Dittmer, Musicological Studies 26] [Binningen]: Institute of Mediaeval Music, 1978); (2 – [1–71 ed.

Monophony outweighs polyphony in a ratio of 2:1 in the conductus repertory, and it is easy to see why scholars of monophonic music are quick to point to the importance of the former as opposed to the latter. In the case of the conductus, the argument could be pushed further, and it could be argued that the function of the monophonic conductus, and the way in which it is understood, underpins those of its polyphonic counterparts. And while Chapters 4 and 5 of Discovering Medieval Song clearly focus exclusively on the polyphonic conductus cum caudis, the rest of the book shuttles back and forth between monophonic and polyphonic types. In short, Discovering Medieval Song reflects, although perhaps not Friedrich Gennrich, Summa musicae medii aevi 8, 65–71 in page proof only] Langen bei Frankfurt: n.p., 1962; R [1–64, 65–71 corrected], [72–155 ed. Luther A. Dittmer (Musicological Studies 17)] Brooklyn, NY: Institute of Mediaeval Music, n.d.; Hildesheim: Georg Olms Verlag, 1972).

<sup>3</sup> Eduard Gröninger, Repertoire-Untersuchungen zum mehrstimmigen Notre-Dame Conductus, Kölner Beiträge zur Musikforschung 2 (Regensburg: Gustav Bosse Verlag, 1939).

<sup>4</sup> Robert Falck's indispensable study of the conductus focussed on manuscript distribution and transmission as well as providing an inventory of the repertory, but stopped short of most of the questions posed here. See 'The Structure of the Polyphonic and Monophonic Conductus Repertories: A Study of Source Concordances and Their Relation to the Chronology and Provenance of Musical Styles' (PhD diss., Brandeis University, 1970), published as The Notre Dame Conductus: A Study of the Repertory, Musicological Studies 33 (Henryville, Ottawa and Binningen: Institute of Mediaeval Music, 1981). Another, almost exactly contemporary inventory of the repertory was Gordon Anderson, 'Notre-Dame and Related Conductus: A Catalogue Raisonné', Miscellanea musicologica 6 (1972) 153–229; 7 (1975) 1–81.

<sup>5</sup> Wolfenbüttel, Herzog-August-Bibliothek, Cod. Guelf. 628 Helmst.; Wolfenbüttel, Herzog-August-Bibliothek, Cod. Guelf. 1099 Helmst.; Florence, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana Pluteus 29.1; Madrid, Biblioteca Nacional, 20486.

in exactly the proportio dupla of the relationship between monophony and polyphony, the essential structure of the surviving repertory.

Similarly, poetry and music are of equal importance. Explaining the structure of rithmus is as important as accounting for discantus, and the circulation of works without music is just as significant as their distribution with fully fledged notation. It is taken as axiomatic that a conductus consists of words and notes and that a surviving conductus text with no notated concordances was probably conceived to be sung. Of course, there must have been occasions when this was not true, and it might perhaps be going too far to agree with those who hold that rithmus was a style of poetry inherently destined to be sung. And it also raises the question of what a conductus poem without music signifies: is it simply an aide-mémoire in which the music is committed to memory? Does the unperformed poem have value without the music? Or is the source merely deficient? There are examples of all three possibilities, and more, but as far as the working practices in Discovering Medieval Song are concerned, a conductus poem is a conductus. In addition to explaining how the poetry and music of the conductus work and how they interrelate, Discovering Medieval Song tries to disentangle questions of context, function and performance. With the starting point that no single explanation can account for the entire repertory, the strengths and weakness of competing pieces of evidence – some known, others new – are evaluated to give, if not a definitive view of the function of the genre, at least a set of broadly acceptable considerations for how each part of the repertory might be so viewed.

And talking about ‘parts’ of the repertory returns to the question of defining its scope. Ever since Eduard Gröninger’s first attempt to pull together all the surviving sources for the genre in 1939, the conductus has been caught up with the four major surviving sources just mentioned and with the concept of the ‘Notre-Dame School’, a model for understanding the music of the long thirteenth century that emerges, however, not from work on the conductus but from a study of organum. So, for example, the single critical edition of the conductus repertory bears the title Notre-Dame and Related Conductus.<sup>6</sup> But unlike the case of organum – where the idea of ‘Notre-Dame’ really means something about origin and style – for the conductus it means little more than ‘preserved in one or more of the four surviving major sources’. This becomes problematic when other repertoires are brought into play. For example, the four offices that preserve conducti – and that reveal much of their twelfth-century function – from Beauvais, Laon, Le Puy and Sens do not share a great deal in terms of material with the works found in the ‘Notre-Dame’ sources. The same could be said of the Norman-Sicilian repertoire or fourteenth-century sources from east of the Rhine that employ the term conductus as a descriptor for the work. Although this serves to distance the conductus from the repertoire of Aquitanian versus, it leaves a large number of ragged ends to the repertoire, perhaps inevitable when dealing with 570 surviving sources. But it does raise some interesting questions a propos such a work as ‘Novus annus dies magnus’, for example, a monophonic conductus that is found in the Norman-Sicilian repertoire, the Le Puy and Sens offices and one of the earliest manuscripts of the Aquitanian repertoire, but not in any of the so-called Notre-Dame sources. It is a good example of how the different parts of the repertoire may hold together and – just as importantly – how they may resist explanations that link to them.

<sup>6</sup> Gordon Anderson (ed.), Notre-Dame and Related Conductus: Opera omnia, 11 vols. [Institute of Mediaeval Music], Collected Works 10 (Henryville, Ottawa and Binningen: Institute of Mediaeval Music, 1979–) [all but vols. 7 and 11 have appeared].

The only surviving complete edition of the repertoire was conceived no later than the mid-1970s, and although in some respects it has stood the test of time (especially in terms of its critical commentaries, notes on the poetic texts and so on), understandings of how musica cum littera (the parts of the conductus that carried the text [littera]) was projected in medieval performance have moved on a good deal to the extent that, were one planning an edition of the repertoire today, the fundamental premises on which it would be based would be very different. Reasons for this claim are given in Chapter 3 but are taken as axiomatic throughout the book, especially in the attitude taken to the display of music examples in modern transcription. It would be wrong, though, not to recognise the immense erudition and meticulous scholarship that characterise the editorial work of Gordon Anderson, Hans Tischler and Janet Knapp, even if ultimately the conclusions in Discovering Medieval Song vary radically from theirs.<sup>7</sup>

Work on Discovering Medieval Song was greatly advanced, indeed made possible, by a series of three large grants from the United Kingdom’s Arts and Humanities Research Council that enabled a number of related initiatives, of which this monograph is one.<sup>8</sup> Jointly titled ‘CPI Cantum pulcriorem invenire’ (of which the title of this monograph is a loose translation), the funding permitted the research towards, and construction of, the database that underpins so much of this book,<sup>9</sup> three fully funded PhD studentships (the work of which is referred to throughout this volume) and the time required to research and write this monograph. Most important of all, it funded the work of three professional tenors to conduct a Europe-wide programme of performance and three CDs with Hyperion Records.<sup>10</sup> This allowed the project to put into practice the results of the work in Chapter 3 and was based on sustained workshop practice that developed a method of declaiming the cum littera sections of conducti (all parts of the monophonic repertory and the texted sections of the conductus cum caudis) that started from the structure, meaning and aesthetic of the poetry. The 46 works recorded on the three CDs are available to purchase, download or stream and form the basis for the discussion of large parts of the book. Works that form part of the recording project are identified with an asterisk (eg *‘Relegentur ab area’) in the text to aid the process of gaining access to a sonic image of the work under discussion.

<sup>7</sup> Anderson, Notre-Dame and Related Conductus, Hans Tischler (ed.), The Earliest Polyphonic Art Music: The 150 Two-Part Conductus in the Notre-Dame Manuscripts [Institute of Mediaeval Music], Collected Works 24 (Ottawa: Institute of Mediaeval Music, 2005); Janet Knapp (ed.), Thirty-Five Conductus for Two and Three Voices, Collegium Musicum 6 ([New Haven, CT]: Yale University Department of Music Graduate School, 1965).

<sup>8</sup> Arts and Humanities Research Council, Research Grant, July 2010 (Cantum pulcriorem invenire: Thirteenth-Century Latin Poetry and Music (CPI-I); AH/HO34226/1); Arts and Humanities Research Council, Research Grant, April 2014 (Medieval Music, Big Data and the Research Blend [Transforming Musicology] (CPI-II); AH/L006820/1); Arts and Humanities Research Council, Follow-on Funding for Impact and Engagement, November 2014 (Cantum Pulcriorem invenire – Thirteenth-Century Latin Poetry and Music: Workshop, Performance and Impact (CPI-III); AH/M006425/1).

<sup>9</sup> Gregorio Bevilacqua and Mark Everist, ‘Cantum pulcriorem invenire: Latin Poetry and Song, 1160–1330’, 2012, <http://catalogue.conductus.ac.uk>.

<sup>10</sup> John Potter, Christopher O’Gorman and Rogers Covey-Crump, ‘Conductus 1: Music and Poetry of Thirteenth-Century France’. Hyperion, CDA67949, 2012 (www.hyperion-records.co.uk/dc.asp?dc=D\_CDA67949); John Potter, Christopher O’Gorman and Rogers Covey-Crump, ‘Conductus 2: Music and Poetry of Thirteenth-Century France’. Hyperion, CDA67998, 2013 (www.hyperion-records.co.uk/dc.asp?dc=D\_CDA67998); John Potter, Christopher O’Gorman and Rogers Covey-Crump, ‘Conductus 3: Music and Poetry of Thirteenth-Century France’. Hyperion, CDA68115, 2016 (www.hyperion-records.co.uk/dc.asp?dc=D\_CDA68115).