

Literature and Moral Feeling

An influential body of recent work on moral psychology has stressed the interconnections among ethics, narrative, and empathy. Yet as Patrick Colm Hogan argues, this work is so vague in its use of the term “narrative” as to be almost substanceless, and this vagueness is in large part due to the neglect of literary study. Extending his previous work on universal story structures, Hogan argues that we can transform ill-defined intuitions about narrative and ethics into explicit and systematic accounts of the deep connections between moral attitudes and narratives. These connections are, in turn, inseparable from empathy, a concept that Hogan proceeds to clarify and defend against a number of widely read critiques. In the course of the book, Hogan develops and illustrates his arguments through analyses of global narratives, constructing illuminating ethical interpretations of literary works ranging from Shakespeare to Chinese drama and the Bhagavad Gita.

PATRICK COLM HOGAN, Board of Trustees Distinguished Professor in the English Department and the Cognitive Science Program at the University of Connecticut, is the author of more than twenty scholarly books, including The Mind and Its Stories: Narrative Universals and Human Emotion (Cambridge University Press, 2003) and What Literature Teaches Us about Emotion (Cambridge University Press, 2011).

Acknowledgments

An earlier version of the Nosferatu analysis was delivered as a plenary address at the “Narration, Imagination, and Emotion in Moving Image Media” conference of the Center for Cognitive Studies of the Moving Image at Calvin College, Grand Rapids, Michigan, in July 2004. I am grateful to Carl Plantinga for inviting me to present this work. I am grateful to the participants for their comments and criticisms. It was subsequently published as “Narrative Universals, Nationalism, and Sacrificial Terror: From Nosferatu to Nazism” in Film Studies: An International Review 8 (2006): 93–105. I am grateful to the guest editors of that issue, Daniel Barratt and Jonathan Frome, for their very helpful suggestions for improving and clarifying the analysis, and to Manchester University Press for permission to reprint.

An earlier version of part of Chapter 3 was published as “Negativity Bias, Emotion Targets, and Emotion Systems” in Behavioral and Brain Sciences 37.3 (2014): 314–315. I am grateful to Paul Bloom for inviting my reflections on this topic; I am also grateful to Cambridge University Press for permission to reprint.

An earlier version of a different part of Chapter 3 and part of Chapter 4 was published as “Narrative Universals, Emotion, and Ethics” in Poetics Today 41.2 (2020): 187–204. I am grateful to Lisa Zunshine for inviting the essay and for leading me to think more seriously about the role of comparative literary study in ethics; I am also grateful to Duke University Press for permission to reprint.

An earlier version of part of Chapter 6 was circulated at a seminar for the 2020 annual convention of the Shakespeare Association of America. I am grateful to Bradley Irish for inviting me to the seminar and to the participants for their comments and suggestions.

An earlier version of part of Chapter 7 was presented at the 2018 Modern Language Association Convention in New York City. I am grateful to the other panelists – Paul Bloom and Joshua Landy – and to the moderator, Lalita Pandit Hogan, for their comments and criticisms.

x Acknowledgments

I am grateful to Robert Sapolsky for comments on my brief treatment of neo-group selection and to Ruijia Wang for invaluable help with the Chinese in the Yuan plays.

Stephen Acerra, Emily Watton, and Janka Romero of Cambridge University Press have been kind and helpful throughout. Two anonymous referees gave valuable feedback on the manuscript. Finally, Brian Parkinson, Maya Tamir, and Daniel Dukes were generous and painstaking in their reading of and response to the manuscript; they saved me from numerous errors and missteps (needless to say, I remain responsible for any errors and missteps that remain).
