

Contents

Acknowledgments	page viii
Glossary	ix
General Introduction: Ibn Khaldūn – A Theory for Our Time?	xv
PART I ON HISTORY	I
1 History is a branch of philosophy	2
2 Errors to which historians are prone	8
PART II ON COMBAT SOLIDARITIES	15
3 Man is a social animal	16
4 Bedouins are naturally courageous, much more so than sedentary peoples	22
5 On combat solidarities, and the conditions in which their strength declines	27
6 Bedouin nations are more skilled at conquest than other nations	33
7 As long as combat solidarities exist among members of the same nation, the monarchy will remain in that nation's control, even if power changes hands between its various branches	39
8 When the Arabs take control of cultivated territories, they quickly bring about their ruin	45

Contents

PART III ON THE STATE	51
9 States and universal dynasties are built by tribes and combat solidarities	52
10 A religious cause endows a nascent dynasty with force in addition to the combat solidarities derived from the number of its supporters	58
11 Every dynasty controls a finite number of domains and territories, which cannot be exceeded	64
12 It is natural for the sovereign to isolate himself in his glory, seeking peace and comfort	70
13 The leader of the dynasty puts his clients and those whom he has reared before his own kin and combat solidarities	76
14 The caliphate; the kingdom of the Jews; and the pope and the emperor in Christendom	82
15 On war	87
16 On taxation	94
17 The dissolution of a dynasty	100
18 A nascent dynasty cannot overthrow the sitting dynasty in a single blow; victory must come in time	106
PART IV CITIES	113
19 States precede cities and capitals; the latter cannot exist without the prior existence of the state	114
20 On the construction and organization of cities	120
21 The superiority of urban centres and cities, the prosperity of their inhabitants, and the amount of spending in their markets are based on the size of their populations	127
22 On prices in cities	134
23 Sedentary civilization is the highest and final degree of any civilization; for this reason, it is destined to decay and disintegrate	139
24 On military and civil functions, and their respective roles in the rise and fall of capital cities	145

Contents

PART V EARNING A LIVING	153
25 On the true meaning of 'subsistence' and 'profit'	154
26 Happiness and profit generally go to those who are skilled at flattery and know when to bend the knee	160
27 Crafts and professions cannot fully flourish if sedentary civilization and population growth are not flourishing as well	166
PART VI SCIENCES	173
28 Sciences are concentrated in centres of high population density, where sedentary civilization is firmly entrenched	174
29 The categories of the intellectual sciences	181
30 The burden of the sciences in Islam fell primarily upon the shoulders of the Persians	188
31 Learning a language is like mastering any other craft	194
PART VII TEXTS FROM IBN KHALDŪN'S UNIVERSAL HISTORY	201
32 On the origins of the Hilālī invasions	204
33 Succession in Tlemcen: the assassination of the sultan Abū Hammū and the accession of his son, Abū Tāshfīn (1318)	212
34 The history of the kingdom of Granada (1238–1492)	218
35 A short history of Islam	226
Select Bibliography	234
Index	235