

Extradition and Empire

In the first book-length study of the imperial history of extradition in Hong Kong, Ivan Lee shows how British judges, lawyers, and officials navigated the nature of extradition, debated its legalities, and distinguished it over time from other modalities of criminal jurisdiction – including deportation, rendition, and trial and punishment under territorial and extraterritorial laws. These complex debates were rooted in the contested legal status of Chinese subjects under the Opium War treaties of 1842–43. They also intersected wider shifts and tensions in British ideas of territorial sovereignty, criminal justice and procedure, and the legal rights and liabilities of British subjects and alien persons in British territory. By the 1870s, a new area of imperial law emerged as Britain incorporated a frontier colony into an increasingly territorial and legally homogenous empire. This important perspective revises our understanding of the legal origins of colonial Hong Kong and British imperialism in China.

Ivan Lee is Assistant Professor in the Faculty of Law at the National University of Singapore. His research centres on the history of ideas and practices of criminal law, jurisdiction, and procedure in the British Empire.

The PhD dissertation on which this book is based was supervised by Professor P. G. McHugh of Sidney Sussex College, University of Cambridge. Among other things, Paul taught me to hone my disparate interests in the Chinese populations of the British Empire into a feasible and impactful topic for a book-length project. In deciding to focus on the jurisdictional politics of extradition, I was also inspired by my interactions with the organisers and participants of the Legal History and Empires: Perspectives from the Colonized Conference, held in 2018 at the University of the West Indies at Cave Hill, Barbados. It took me years to realise how much I had learnt from those brilliant scholars in just three days, over and between delicious meals of bread-fruit and mahi-mahi.

Other scholars offered generous comments on my work at various conferences and events. I am grateful to the organisers and participants of the 7th Annual Doctoral Scholarship Conference, held in 2017 at the Yale Law School; the 48th Annual Meeting of the American Society for Legal History, held in 2018 in Houston, Texas; the London Legal History Seminar of December 2018; the 3rd Conference of the International Society for Chinese Law and History, held in 2019 at the National Taipei University; and the 3rd Asian Legal History Conference, held in 2023 at the Chinese University of Hong Kong.

Next, I reserve special thanks for Lisa Ford, who, as the editor of this book, provided extremely detailed and helpful comments at every stage of the project, teaching me to write clearly and precisely. Michael Lobban helped to shape my thinking at pivotal junctures over several years; Christopher Munn inspired me with his deep knowledge of and passion for the history of Hong Kong, and Jenny H. Day enlightened me on Qing Chinese views of Chinese political refugees. Other scholars who provided helpful suggestions and criticism include Antony Anghie, Duncan Bell, Edward Cavanagh, Shaunnagh Dorsett, Coel Kirkby, Diane Kirkby, Jack Jin Gary Lee, Michael Ng, Gautham Rao, Christopher Roberts, Mitra Sharafi, Kevin Y. L. Tan, and the two anonymous readers who reviewed this book for Cambridge University Press.

The National University of Singapore (NUS) Faculty of Law and Centre for Asian Legal Studies provided research funding for this project – I gratefully acknowledge their generous support. More generally, I am grateful to all of my colleagues at NUS Law for their mentorship and collegiality. Andrew Halpin, Arif Jamal, James Penner, and many others offered kind words of advice whenever I needed them. I also thank the friendly staff of The National Archives in London, the Government Records Service in Hong Kong, the C J Koh Law Library in Singapore, and the University Library and Squire Law Library in Cambridge for their help in accessing historical records. Separately, Isabelle Lewis drew the maps that appear in this book, and Cecelia Cancellaro, Victoria Phillips, and others at Cambridge University Press managed its publication with patience and professionalism. Also, earlier versions of parts of Chapters 1 and 3 were originally published as two journal articles, ‘From Reciprocity to Territoriality: Extradition, the Opium War, and the Idea of British Sovereignty in Hong Kong, 1842–44’, Law and History Review 40, no. 3 (2022): 437–58, and ‘British Extradition Practice in Early Colonial Hong Kong’, Law & History 6, no. 1 (2019): 85–114. I thank Cambridge University Press and the Australian and New Zealand Law and History Society for allowing me to repurpose these works under generous licences. Finally, my family and friends know that I could not have written this book without their love and support. I am more grateful to them than words can express.
