Introduction: Rationale, Goals, and Overview of the Book	1
1 The Evolving Complexity Theory of Talent Development: An Overview of “One Long Argument”	15
1.1 Reductive Attempts of Explaining (Away) Evolving Complexity: Pro-Nurture versus Pro-Nature	16
1.2 An Alternative, Nonreductionist Approach: ECT as “One Long Argument”	18
1.3 The Substance of ECT as “One Long Argument”: What, How, When, and Where	25
1.4 Putting It All Together: How ECT Explains Various Talent Achievements	32
2 The Question of What Develops: Talent as a New Machine Made of Old Parts	34
2.1 The Bioecological Foundation of Talent: Beyond the Capacity View	34
2.2 Evidence of the Role of Aptitudes and Dispositions for Bioecological Effectivities and Increasing Differentiation	44
2.3 The Sociocultural Foundation of Talent: Cultural Niche Construction and Differential Social Distribution of Talent	47
2.4 Institutionalized Pathways of Cultivating Talent and Its Discontent: Various Ways of Adaptation to Domain and Social Constraints and Transformation	56
2.5 Summary: Foundations of TD and Evolving Complexity	61
3 The Question of How Talent Develops: Individual Niche-Picking and Cultural Selection as Two Invisible Hands	62
3.1 From Spontaneous Interaction to Purposive, Self-Directed Endeavor: An Ontogenesis of Talent Development	63
3.2 The Emergence of CA in the PAS: Self-Organization toward Personal Integration	67
3.3 Conditions and Functions of Maximal Adaptation	72

3.4	Putting It All Together: CA and MA as Two Driving Forces in Talent Development	78
3.5	Summary	81
4	The Question of When Critical Events Should Take Place: Developmental Windows and Progressions in Talent Development	83
4.1	An Overview of Research in History	84
4.2	Developmental Windows and Developmental Progression of Talent Development	86
4.3	Three Critical Transitions Based on ECT	91
4.4	Putting It All Together: Matthew Effects Revisited	100
5	The Question of Where: Cultural Evolution and How It Transforms Talent and Talent Development	104
5.1	After Genes and Traits, and Guns and Germs, Then What? The Problem of Cultural Evolution and Evolving Individuality	104
5.2	Social-Historical Conditions and Cultural Evolution	109
5.3	Changes in Social-Historical Conditions That Influenced the What, How, and When of TD	117
5.4	The Needham Puzzle: A Case Study of Cultural Evolution and “A Few Great Men and Women”	123
5.5	Summary	128
6	How ECT Explains Various Talent Achievements	130
6.1	The Rhetorical Structure of ECT in Formulating Its “One Long Argument”	132
6.2	How ECT Explains High-Level Expertise and Creative Productivity with Levels of Evolving Complexity	136
6.3	Can ECT Explain Apparently “Abnormal” Talent Development?	148
6.4	Conclusion: Back to the “One Long Argument” against Short-Cut Reductionism	151
7	ECT in a Broader Landscape of Theoretic Models: What Is New?	154
7.1	Purposes, Properties, and Functions of ECT	154
7.2	Distinct Features of ECT as Compared to Component Theories and Models	158
7.3	New Features of ECT as Compared to Other Process-Oriented Theories and Models	164
7.4	The Challenges to ECT in a Broader Scheme of Developmental Sciences	172
8	Implications of ECT for Talent Identification and Assessment of Developmental Progressions	178
8.1	Basic Propositions of ECT and Four Identification/Assessment Instruments	179

Contents	ix
8.2 Instrumentation and Interpretation of the Four Instruments in Light of ECT	181
8.3 How the Four ECT-Based Talent Identification and Assessment Indicators Can Be Used by Educational Practitioners	195
8.4 How the Four Indicators Can Promote Personal Growth When Used by Individuals as Stakeholders of TD	197
9 Implications of ECT for Promoting Human Excellence	198
9.1 A New Era in the Ecology of Learning and TD	200
9.2 Rethinking Human Potential: Policy and Practical Implications of ECT	203
9.3 Cultural Niche Construction for Human Excellence in the Information Age	207
9.4 ECT as a Unique Angle for Counseling and Guidance for Human Excellence	211
10 Implications of ECT for Research Methodology: Toward a New Epistemology of Human Excellence	215
10.1 Paradigm Shifts in the Epistemology of TD	216
10.2 The Changing Methodology in Studying TD as a Form of Developmental Diversity	219
10.3 Toward a New Epistemology of TD and Human Excellence	227
Epilogue: Is AI a Threat to Human Excellence?	239
Postscript: Remembering Larry	253
