

Contents

Acknowledgements	page xiii
Introduction	1
Theme and Scope	1
A Note on Methodology	6
Overview of the Chapters	8
1 Atrocity Crimes, the Community of Humanity and the Experience of Inhumanity	10
1.1 Introduction	10
1.2 Humanity’s Norms	12
1.3 The Dark Side of Humanity	14
1.4 Dehumanisation and the Experience of Inhumanity	19
1.5 Conclusion	23
2 ‘We’ and Crimes against Humanity	25
2.1 Introduction	25
2.2 On the Use and Abuse of Durkheim for International Criminal Law	26
2.3 Humanity as Symbolic Order	31
2.4 The Self-Constitution of Humanity within International Criminal Law	34
2.5 Inhumanity: Ongwen as a Strange Figure	39
2.6 Conclusion	43
3 Crimes against Humanity, Dehumanisation and Rehumanisation: The Case of Duch	45
3.1 Introduction	45

xii	Contents
	3.2 Case 001: Duch	46
	3.3 Dehumanisation in the Case of Duch	49
	3.4 Rehumanisation in the Case of Duch	54
	3.5 Reading the Case of Duch with Hannah Arendt	57
	3.6 Duch, Arendt and We	62
	3.7 Conclusion	65
4	Estranged from the World: The Experience of Dehumanisation and Its Normative Implications	67
	4.1 Introduction	67
	4.2 The Conditio Inhumana : A Phenomenology of Dehumanisation	68
	4.3 Alienation: Towards a Critical Theory of Dehumanisation	72
	4.4 The Normative Challenge of the Experience of Dehumanisation	77
	4.5 Conclusion	84
5	Law, Time and Inhumanity: Judging the Imprescriptible	85
	5.1 Introduction	85
	5.2 The Law of Imprescriptibility	86
	5.3 Imprescriptibility and the Unforgiveable	89
	5.4 The Time of Imprescriptibility	92
	5.5 The Time of Judgement	96
	5.6 Conclusion	101
6	Silent Claims and the Limits of International Criminal Law	103
	6.1 Introduction	103
	6.2 Varieties of Suffering	104
	6.3 Suffering within and beyond International Criminal Law	106
	6.4 Strange Suffering	110
	6.5 Silent Claims	115
	6.6 Conclusion	119
	Epilogue	121
	Prosecuting in the Name of Humanity	121
	Other Silences	123
	Attentiveness	124
	Bibliography	126
	Index	135