1 Introduction

1.1 How Theories are Developed ........ 1

1.2 The Biomedical Model .............. 2

- 1.2.1 What is the Difference Between a Mental and a Physical Illness? 3
- 1.2.2 Dualism ............................ 5
- 1.2.3 Dualism and the Perils of Reductionism 5

1.3 Do Discrete Mental Illnesses Exist? 9

1.4 Diagnosing Discrete Mental Distress Conditions 10

- 1.4.1 Diagnostic Reliability of the Psychoses using Operational Criteria 12
- 1.4.2 Manic-Depression and Schizophrenia 13
- 1.4.3 Schizoaffective Disorder 14

1.5 Alternatives to the Idea of Discrete Categories 15

- 1.5.1 Spectra of Behaviour 15
- 1.5.2 Symptom Clusters and Dimensional Models 17

1.6 Features of Complex Behaviour 19

- 1.6.1 Causality .......................... 20
- 1.6.2 Does ‘Mental Illness’ Exist? 21

1.7 The Role of Psychology 24

Further Reading .......................... 25

2 Madness – A History of Ideas

Introduction ........................... 27

2.1 Humoral Theory 28

2.2 Cartesian Dualism 30
Contents

2.3 Associationism 31
2.4 Nervous Disorders 32
2.5 Faculty Psychology 32
2.6 Phrenology and Localisation – Mapping Behaviour to the Brain
  2.6.1 General Paresis of the Insane 34
  2.6.2 Moving Away from Localisation 35
2.7 Asylums 35
  2.7.1 Philippe Pinel and the Bicêtre Hospital 35
  2.7.2 Moral Treatment 36
  2.7.3 Aliens and Descriptive Psychopathology 37
2.8 Degenerationism 38
2.9 Neurasthenia 39
2.10 Kraepelinian Nosology 40
2.11 Psychoanalysis 41
2.12 Adolf Meyer and the Emergence of Social Psychiatry 43
2.13 Madness in a Neo-Kraepelinian World 44
Chapter Summary 47
Further Reading 48

3 Emotion 50

Introduction 50
3.1 Emotions 50
  3.1.1 Problems with Studying Emotion 51
3.2 Basic emotions 52
  3.2.1 How are Emotions Experienced? 53
  3.2.2 How are Emotions Generated? 54
3.3 Emotion and Motivation 56
  3.3.1 Approach (Appetitive) Emotions 57
  3.3.2 Withdrawal (Avoidance) Emotions 58
3.4 Stress, Personality and Affect 59
  3.4.1 Anhedonia 60
  3.4.2 Subjective Well-Being 61
3.5 Psychological Equilibrium 63
3.6 Social Cognition 64
  3.6.1 Self-Regulation 65
  3.6.2 Emotional Regulation 66
  3.6.3 Using Emotions 67
  3.6.4 Reappraising and Ruminating 68
Chapter Summary 70
Further Reading 71
4 Control, Stress and Coping

4.1 The Further Actions of Prefrontal Cortex 72
   4.1.1 Cognitive Control 74
   4.1.2 Why is Control Important? 75
   4.1.3 How is Control Assessed? 75
   4.1.4 The Cascade Model of Cognitive Control 77
4.2 Self-Regulation 79
   4.2.1 Goals and Sub-Goals 80
   4.2.2 Are All Goals Conscious? 81
4.3 The Neurobiology of Stress 82
   4.3.1 The Sympathetic Adrenomedullary System 83
   4.3.2 The Hypothalamic-Pituitary-Adrenocortical Axis 83
   4.3.3 Allostatic Load 85
4.4 Resilience 86
4.5 Coping 87
   4.5.1 Coping Resources: Dispositional Factors 89
   4.5.2 Coping Resources: Social Support 90
   4.5.3 Coping Processes 91
   4.5.4 Back to Emotional Regulation 92

Chapter Summary 93
Further Reading 94

5 Distress

5.1 Depression and Anxiety 95
   5.1.1 The Basics 95
   5.1.2 Aetiology and Treatments 96
   5.1.3 Depression and Anxiety in History 98
5.2 The Emotional Disorders 102
5.3 The Neural Substrates of the Emotional Disorders 105
5.4 The Hippocampal Formation 106
   5.4.1 What Do We Know about the Functions of the Hippocampal Formation? 106
   5.4.2 The Hippocampus and Memory 107
   5.4.3 Stress and Context 110
   5.4.4 The Role of Neurogenesis in Human Behaviour 110
5.5 The Potential Relationship between the Hippocampi, Neurogenesis and Mental Distress 113
   5.5.1 Neuroplasticity and Mental Distress 114
5.6 Depression 114
   5.6.1 The Hippocampus in Depression 115
   5.6.2 The Anterior Cingulate Cortex in Depression 117
Contents

5.6.3 The Basal Ganglia in Depression 119
5.7 Treating Depression 120
5.7.1 The Brain’s Default Mode Network 122
Chapter Summary 125
Further Reading 125

6 Psychosocial Perspectives on Distress 127
6.1 Distress: A Normal Response or a Clinical Disorder? 127
6.2 The Vulnerability–Stress Hypothesis 130
6.3 A Social Psychiatric Perspective 135
6.3.1 Psychosocial Vulnerabilities 137
6.3.2 A Lifespan Perspective 138
6.4 A Social Cognitive Perspective 139
6.4.1 The Cognitive Vulnerability Hypothesis 139
6.4.2 An Attachment Framework 141
6.5 A Social–Materialist Perspective 143
Chapter Summary 145
Further Reading 146

7 Psychosis: Symptoms and Causes 147
7.1 The Symptoms of Psychosis 147
7.1.1 Disordered Thought 149
7.2 Epidemiology of Psychosis 151
7.2.1 What Causes Psychosis? 152
7.3 Brain Changes in Psychosis 153
7.3.1 Dopamine and Psychosis 153
7.3.2 Antipsychotics 153
7.3.3 Extrapyramidal Side Effects and the Role of Dopamine in Movement 155
7.3.4 The Efficacy of Medication 156
7.3.5 The Action of Neuroleptics 159
7.3.6 Atypical Neuroleptics 160
7.3.7 The Status of Antipsychotics 161
7.4 The Dopamine Hypothesis 162
7.5 Revising the Dopamine Hypothesis 163
7.5.1 The Status of the Dopamine Hypothesis of Depression 166
7.6 The Neuropsychology of Psychosis 167
7.6.1 Psychological Theories of Psychosis 169
7.6.2 Testing the Theories using Traditional Frontal Lobe Tasks 171
7.6.3 Concept Formation, Reward and the WCST 171
7.6.4 Incentive Salience

7.6.5 What do Neuropsychological Theories Offer?

7.7 Problems with Insight

7.8 Problems with Connectivity in Psychosis

7.8.1 Default Mode Network

7.8.2 Hippocampal and Prefrontal Pathway

7.8.3 Implications of Connectivity Problems

Chapter Summary

8 Psychosocial Perspectives on Psychosis

Introduction

8.1 The Views of People who have Psychotic Experiences

8.2 The Vulnerability–Stress Hypothesis

8.2.1 Vulnerability

8.2.2 Stress

8.2.3 The Vulnerability–Stress Hypothesis Revisited

8.3 Environmental Risk Factors for Psychosis

8.3.1 Childhood Trauma

8.3.2 Poverty

8.3.3 Urbanicity

8.3.4 Migration and Minority Ethnicity

8.3.5 Social Hostility and Re-Traumatisation

8.3.6 How do Environmental Factors ‘Get into the Mind’?

8.4 Is There a Clear Distinction between Psychosis and Normality?

8.4.1 A Psychosis Continuum

8.4.2 Emotion and Psychosis

Chapter Summary

Contents

9.4.5 De-Stigmatisation 215
9.5 The Contribution of Mental Health Professionals to Recovery 217
Chapter Summary 219
Further Reading 220

10 Psychological Therapies

Introduction 221
10.1 Diagnosis or Formulation? 221
10.2 Does Psychological Therapy Work? 226
10.2.1 Outcomes Research 227
10.2.2 Empirically Supported Therapies 229
10.2.3 The Limitations of Randomised Controlled Trials 232
10.2.4 Practice-Based Research 233
10.2.5 Process Research 234
10.3 So Just How do Psychological Therapies Work? 236
10.4 Can Psychological Therapy be Harmful? 237
Chapter Summary 240
Further Reading 241

11 The Treatment of Mental Distress with Psychiatric Medication

11.1 Modern Pharmaceutical Research 244
11.1.1 Serendipity 245
11.2 The Early History of Psychoactive Drugs 246
11.3 The Later History of Psychiatric Drugs 250
11.4 The Clinical Trial 251
11.4.1 Problems Involved in Testing Pharmacological Treatments 252
11.4.2 Pragmatic Clinical Trials 254
11.5 Clinical Effectiveness 257
11.5.1 Meta-Analyses of Treatment Effectiveness 260
11.6 The Clinical Effectiveness of Antidepressants 262
11.6.1 Irving Kirsch and the Use of Unpublished Clinical Data 262
11.6.2 The Exploration of Dirk Eyding and Co-Workers (2010) into Reboxetine, a Selective Noradrenaline Reuptake Inhibitor 263
11.6.3 The STAR*D Study – an Example of Researcher Bias 264
11.6.4 An Analysis of these Studies 267
11.7 Models of Drug Action 269
11.8 Things to Consider in Future Research 271
Chapter Summary 272
