Collective Wisdom

Principles and Mechanisms

James Madison wrote, “Had every Athenian citizen been a Socrates, every Athenian assembly would still have been a mob.” The contributors to this volume discuss and for the most part challenge this claim by considering conditions under which many minds can be wiser than one. With backgrounds in economics, cognitive science, political science, law, and history, the authors consider information markets, the Internet, jury debates, democratic deliberation, and the use of diversity as mechanisms for improving collective decisions. At the same time, they consider voter irrationality and paradoxes of aggregation as possibly undermining the wisdom of crowds. Implicitly or explicitly, the volume also offers guidance and warnings to institutional designers.

Hélène Landemore is a graduate of the École Normale Supérieure in Paris, Sciences Po Paris, and Harvard University (PhD 2008). After holding post-doctoral positions at the Collège de France in Paris, Brown University, and MIT, she is now an assistant professor of political science at Yale University. She is the author of Hume: probabilité et choix raisonnable and Democratic Reason: Politics, Collective Intelligence, and the Rule of the Many. Her work has appeared in the Journal of Moral Philosophy, Raison Publique, Synthese, Journal of Public Deliberation, Critical Review, and Political Psychology.

Jon Elster is Robert K. Merton Professor of Political Science at Columbia University. He was previously a professor at the University of Chicago. From 2005 to 2011, he held the Chaire de Rationalité et Sciences Sociales at the Collège de France in Paris. He is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Academia Europaea, and the Norwegian Academy of Science and is a Corresponding Fellow of the British Academy. He holds honorary doctorates from the universities of Valencia, Stockholm, Trondheim, Bogotá, Torcuata di Tella, and Louvain-la-Neuve. Elster is the author of twenty-three monographs, which have been translated into eighteen languages. The most recent of these include L'Irrationalité; Alexis de Tocqueville: The First Social Scientist; Le Désintéressement; Explaining Social Behavior; Agir contre soi; Closing the Books; and Alchemies of the Mind.

been teaching since 1991. He edited the collection Democracy (Blackwell, 2001) and is the author of Democratic Authority: A Philosophical Framework (Princeton University Press, 2008). He is the editor of the Oxford Handbook in Political Philosophy (Oxford University Press, 2012) and is writing a book about whether normative political theories must be realistic.

John Ferejohn is the Samuel Tilden Professor of Law at New York University. He was formerly a Professor of Social Sciences at the California Institute of Technology (1972–83) and a Professor of Political Science at Stanford University and a Senior Fellow of the Hoover Institution (1983–2009). He is the author of Pork Barrel Politics (Stanford University Press, 1974), as well as many scholarly articles in political science, economics, and philosophy, and the coeditor of Information and Democratic Processes (University of Illinois Press, 1990), Constitutional Culture and Democratic Rule (Cambridge University Press, 2001), and The New Federalism: Can the States be Trusted? (Hoover Institution Press, 1997). He recently coauthored A Republic of Statutes (Yale University Press, 2010).

Lu Hong is Professor of Economics in the Loyola University Graduate School of Business. She writes on implementation theory and mechanism design. Her work has appeared in leading economic theory journals as well as in the proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

Hélène Landemore is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Yale University. She is the author of Hume: probabilité et choix raisonnable (Presses Universitaires de France, 2004) and Democratic Reason: Politics, Collective Intelligence, and the Rule of the Many (Princeton University Press, 2012). Her work has appeared in the Journal of Moral Philosophy, Raison Publique, Synthese, Journal of Public Deliberation, Critical Review, and Political Psychology.

Christian List is Professor of Political Science and Philosophy at the London School of Economics. He works on the theory of democracy, individual and collective agency, and the relationship between reductive and nonreductive explanations in the social sciences. He was awarded a Philip Leverhulme Prize, the Fifth Social Choice and Welfare Prize (jointly with Franz Dietrich), a Laurence S. Rockefeller Visiting Fellowship at Princeton University, and a Visiting Fellowship of the Swedish Collegium for Advanced Study. Jointly with Philip Pettit, he recently published Group Agency: The Possibility, Design, and Status of Corporate Agents (Oxford University Press, 2011).

Gerry Mackie is Associate Professor of Political Science and founding Co-director of the Center on Global Justice at the University of California, San Diego. He is a political theorist interested in contemporary political theory, the history of political thought, and problems of collective action. His main area of interest is democracy, particularly democratic voting. He is the author of Democracy Defended (Cambridge University Press, 2003). Since 1998 he has worked with the nongovernmental organization Tostan in Senegal, which has organized unprecedented mass abandonment of female genital cutting (FGC) in 6,200 communities in seven countries. Since 2004 he has worked closely with UNICEF on the issue, helping devise an internationally distributed best-practices publication and a global abandonment strategy. The “common approach” to the practice endorsed in 2009 by eleven United Nations agencies was influenced by his scholarship. The work on FGC leads him to further study of the sociology of norms, moral psychology, and international human rights.

Hugo Mercier is a Postdoctoral Fellow in the Philosophy, Politics, and Economics Program at the University of Pennsylvania. His work has focused on reasoning and argumentation. He has written a series of articles that cover this issue from different perspectives – moral, developmental, cross-cultural, and political.

Josiah Ober, Constantine Mitsotakis Professor of Political Science and Classics at Stanford University, works on political institutions, culture, and theory, especially the thought and practice of the ancient Greek world. His 2008 book, Democracy and Knowledge: Innovation and Learning in Classical Athens (Princeton University Press), analyzes ancient Athenian democracy as a system for aggregating, aligning, and codifying useful knowledge. The book seeks to explain the close correlation between the development of democratic institutions and state performance in the age of Thucydides, Plato, and Aristotle. His current projects concern the relationship between cooperation and knowledge in Greek political thought, the relationship between civic and human dignity, and the role of expertise in democratic decision making.

Gloria Origgi is a tenured researcher at the Institut Nicod, Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, Paris. Her main areas of interest are social epistemology, philosophy of social and cognitive sciences, and Web studies. Among her most recent publications are Qu'est-ce que la confiance? (VRIN, 2008) and (with Frédéric Darbellay) Repenser l'interdisciplinarité (Slatkin, 2010). She has conceived and is the chief editor of the platform for virtual conferences www.interdisciplines.org.

Scott E. Page is the Leonid Hurwicz Collegiate Professor of Complex Systems, Political Science, and Economics at the University of Michigan–Ann Arbor. He works on questions related to the role of diversity in institutional design and performance. He is the author of The Difference: How the Power of Diversity Creates Better Groups, Firms, Schools, and Societies (Princeton University Press, 2007). His most recent book, Diversity and Complexity (Princeton University Press, 2010), explores the role of diversity in complex systems.

Emile Servan-Schreiber founded and ran the NewsFutures prediction market from 2000 to 2010. He is now a managing director of Lumenogic, a consulting firm specializing in corporate applications of collective intelligence and prediction markets. Trained in the cognitive sciences at Carnegie Mellon University (PhD, 1991), he is the coauthor of two award-winning multimedia CD-Roms
