PARIS AND THE SPIRIT OF 1919

This transnational history of Paris in 1919 explores the global implications of the revolutionary crisis of French society at the end of World War I. As the site of the peace conference Paris was a victorious capital and a city at the center of the world, and Tyler Stovall explores these intersections of globalization and local revolution. The book takes as its central point the eruption of political activism in 1919, using the events of that year to illustrate broader tensions in working-class, race, and gender politics in Parisian, French, and ultimately global society which fueled debates about colonial subjects and the empire. Viewing consumerism and consumer politics as key both to the revolutionary crisis and to new ideas about working-class identity, and arguing against the idea that consumerism depoliticized working people, this history of local labor movements is a study in the making of the modern world.

Tyler Stovall is Professor of History at the University of California, Berkeley. He specializes in modern and contemporary French history, in particular questions of race, colonialism and post-colonialism, labor, and transnationalism.
NEW STUDIES IN EUROPEAN HISTORY

Edited by

PETER BALDWIN, University of California, Los Angeles
CHRISTOPHER CLARK, University of Cambridge
JAMES B. COLLINS, Georgetown University
MIA RODRÍGUEZ-SALGADO, London School of Economics and Political Science
LYNDAL ROPER, University of Oxford
TIMOTHY SNYDER, Yale University

The aim of this series in early modern and modern European history is to publish outstanding works of research, addressed to important themes across a wide geographical range, from southern and central Europe to Scandinavia and Russia, from the time of the Renaissance to the Second World War. As it develops, the series will comprise focused works of wide contextual range and intellectual ambition.

A full list of titles published in the series can be found at:
www.cambridge.org/newstudiesineuropeanhistory
PARIS AND THE SPIRIT OF 1919

Consumer Struggles, Transnationalism, and Revolution

TYLER STOVALL

University of California, Berkeley
To the Memory of Bob Frost
(1952–2011)
Scholar, Teacher, Comrade, Best of Friends
Contents

List of illustrations page viii
List of tables x
Acknowledgments xi
Introduction: a year like no other 1
1 The consumers’ war 25
2 The working class of Paris: definitions and identities 80
3 Remaking the French working class: race, gender, and exclusion 111
4 Spectacular politics 142
5 Consumer movements 182
6 Time, money, and revolution: the metalworkers’ strike of June 1919 238
   Conclusion: legacies 283

Bibliography 299
Index 331
Illustrations

1.1 Requisitioned cattle, place de l’Opéra, August 1914. Source: © Roger-Viollet / The Image Works page 28
1.2 Riot at a Maggi Store, Paris, August 1914. Source: © Roger-Viollet / The Image Works 31
1.3 “Union Sacrée.” Source: H. Pearl Adam, Paris Sees It Through, 176 34
1.4 “A new threatening army.” Source: L’Humanité, October 1, 1916 40
1.5 “Kamerad! Kamerad!” Source: Le Petit Parisien, December 23, 1915 41
1.6 Striking midinettes, place Vendôme, May 18, 1917. Source: © Maurice Branger / Roger-Viollet / The Image Works 62
1.7 Parisians getting bread ration cards, 1918. Source: © Roger-Viollet / The Image Works 71
3.1 Vietnamese working in the Trianon gardens, Versailles, World War I. Source: © Albert Harlingue / Roger-Viollet / The Image Works 121
3.2 Colonial soldiers at a café in the Gare de Lyon, September 1914. Source: © Charles Lansiaux / BHVP / Roger-Viollet / The Image Works 122
3.3 Women and Chinese workers in a French factory, World War I. Source: © Albert Harlingue / Roger-Viollet / The Image Works 124
4.1 Demonstration against the acquittal of Raoul Vilain, place du Trocadero, April 1919. Source: © Albert Harlingue / Roger-Viollet / The Image Works 161
List of illustrations ix

4.2 Images of May Day in Paris, 1919. Source: © Roger-Viollet / The Image Works 165

4.3 Crowds at the 1919 Victory Parade. Source: © Albert Harlingue / Roger-Viollet / The Image Works 173

4.4 July 14, 1919 Victory Parade, Arc de Triomphe. Source: © Roger-Viollet / The Image Works 177

5.1 “Struggle for Home!” Source: Le Petit Parisien, November 14, 1919 194

5.2 “Le denier à dieu.” Source: Le Petit Parisien, October 26, 1919 197

5.3 “La vie chère.” Source: Le Petit Parisien, October 3, 1919 212

5.4 Guay’s grocery store in Montmartre. Source: Le Petit Parisien, July 28, 1919 215

5.5 Members of the vigilance committee of the sixth arrondissement. Source: Le Petit Parisien, September 8, 1919 223

5.6 Vigilance committee members monitoring food prices at Les Halles. Source: Le Petit Parisien, August 11, 1919 225

6.1 Metalworkers on strike in Billancourt, June 1919. Source: Bibliothèque nationale de France 256

6.2 A tramway car stopped by striking transport workers, boulevard Voltaire, June 1919. Source: Bibliothèque nationale de France 258

Every effort has been made to contact the relevant copyright holders of the images reproduced in this book. In the event of any error, the publishers will be pleased to correct the accreditations in any future edition of the work.
Tables

2.1 Parisian workers by industrial sector, 1921
   page 88
2.2 Social class in the Paris area during the 1920s
   93
2.3 Working-class occupations in Greater Paris in the 1920s
   93
3.1 Occupations of working-class women
   115
3.2 Foreigners in the Paris area, 1926
   118
Acknowledgments

Over the all-too-many years it took to bring this study from inception to completion I have been fortunate to benefit from the kind support and sage advice of colleagues, family, and friends. I would first like to thank two colleagues, Mary Louise Roberts and Laura Levine Frader, who both took valuable time out of their schedules to read and comment extensively on full drafts of this manuscript. I am indebted both to their commitment to my work and to the exemplary nature of their own. My thanks also to David Bell and Martha Hanna, whose editing of my article for French Historical Studies on the consumers war helped enormously in shaping my thinking on the subject. I owe a great deal of gratitude to colleagues both near and far who patiently read sections or listened to presentations of this project, including Michael Cohen, Sarah Sussman, Ted Margadant, Joby Margadant, Cathy Kudlick, Aron Rodrigue, Patricia Lorcin, Eric Weitz, Michael Vann, Joe Bohling, and Alex Toledano. I am particularly grateful to the staff of the Undergraduate Division at the University of California, Berkeley, especially Laura Demir, Jill Gerstenberger, and Paul Schwochow, for always cheerfully helping out when needed. In France I benefited enormously from the counsel of Jean-Louis Robert, who was always willing to share his encyclopedic knowledge of Parisian labor with me. Many archivists in France went out of their way to help me with my research; I would like to single out for particular mention Claude Charlot of the Archives of the Paris Prefecture of Police for his many kindnesses. I am also grateful to Dominique Taff at the Archives Nationales Section Outre-Mer for introducing me to some important materials. Funding for this project came from several sources, most notably the Committee on Research of the University of California, Santa Cruz, and the Ford Foundation Minority Postdoctoral Fellowship Program. At Cambridge University Press, I am very grateful to Michael Watson, whose support of this project never flagged. I also want to thank Chloe Howell, who shepherded me through the production process, and Caroline Howlett, who did an excellent job of copyediting this book. In addition, I am indebted to James Collins, editor of the series New Studies in European History, and to the anonymous reviewers for Cambridge University Press, whose incisive comments have made this a much better book.
Acknowledgments

Most of all, I am enormously indebted to my family: my wife Denise and my son Justin. Time and time again, my wife took up the slack on the home front, at times at the expense of her own career, in order to help me complete this book. In particular I thank her for never once complaining about how long it was taking, even though she had every reason to do so. My son showed the same boundless enthusiasm for this book he shows for most things (except vegetables and bedtime). At one point he proclaimed that when he grew up he wanted to be a French historian and a fireman. Not only did he teach me more about consumerism than I ever hoped to learn, but most of all kept my focus on the truly important things in life.

During the last year I lost two of my closest colleagues and friends, both historians of France who had an important impact on this study. The passing of Susanna Barrows came as a tragedy and a deep loss not only for me but for all those she helped train in French history at Berkeley. I was privileged to know her as a mentor, colleague, and friend, and she encouraged this project right from its very beginnings. A few months later I lost my best friend of thirty-five years, Bob Frost. Bob was simply a force of nature, a brilliant scholar, passionate and devoted teacher, and fiercely loyal friend and comrade. I do not think I will see his like again in this lifetime. I very much regret that neither Susanna nor Bob will see this finished book, but I hope in some small way it will help to preserve our memories of them.

In short, my thanks to all those whose support, collegiality, and friendship made this book possible. Many can share responsibility for its fruits, whereas I alone am accountable for its defects. I hope you will all enjoy it, if for no other reason than that you no longer have to listen to me obsess about it.