

Contents

Acknowledgments	page viii
Definitions and conventions	xii
Prologue	xiv
Introduction: The Republic of Women and the republic of letters	1
1 Princess Elisabeth of Bohemia: an ephemeral academy at The Hague in the 1630s	22
2 Anna Maria van Schurman: the birth of an intellectual network	52
3 Marie de Gournay, Marie du Moulin, and Anna Maria van Schurman: constructing intellectual kinship	78
4 Dorothy Moore of Dublin: an expanding network in the 1640s	110
5 Katherine Jones, Lady Ranelagh: many networks, one “incomparable” instrument	142
6 Bathsua Makin: female scholars and the reformation of learning	177
7 Endings: the closing of doors	206
Conclusions	266
Bibliography	284
Index	310