

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-02096-2 - Management as Consultancy: Neo-bureaucracy and the Consultant Manager

Andrew Sturdy, Christopher Wright and Nick Wylie

Table of Contents

More information

Contents

List of tables	page viii
Acknowledgements	ix
1 Management as consultancy – a case of neo-bureaucracy	1
Introduction – a book about management and about consultancy	1
Towards a framework of neo-bureaucracy	3
Aims and structure of the book	10
2 Neo-bureaucratic management and consultancy	14
Introduction	14
Neo-bureaucratic managerial work – activities, occupations and identities	15
Management and the tensions of organising	21
Mechanisms of change – towards management as consultancy?	25
The changing relationships between management and consultancy	31
Conclusion	41
3 The research study	43
Introduction and project background	43
Research design: the sample	46
Data analysis	58
Conclusion	63
4 The work activities of the consultant manager	65
Introduction	65

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-02096-2 - Management as Consultancy: Neo-bureaucracy and the Consultant Manager

Andrew Sturdy, Christopher Wright and Nick Wylie

Table of Contents

More information

vi CONTENTS

Classifying management activities: purpose, structure and relationships	66
What do consultant managers do? Change, integration and strategic efficiency	71
How do consultant managers work? Project/programme management, methodologies and control	80
Conclusion	97
5 Managing relationships as a consultant manager	101
Introduction	101
The consultant manager and 'client relations' – relationship management	102
Adding value	106
Maintaining independence and autonomy from responsibility	109
Senior management sponsorship	114
Managing competition: interactions with external consultants	116
Collaboration and co-production: social ties and partnership	120
Conclusion	123
6 The occupational and career tensions of the consultant manager	127
Introduction	127
Occupational segmentation and the blurring of management and consulting careers	128
Occupational instability and tensions	141
Conclusion	152
7 The identity boundaries and threats of the consultant manager	154
Introduction	154
Organisational membership, boundaries and ambivalence	155
Crossing internal boundaries: the structural ambiguity of the consultant manager	160

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-02096-2 - Management as Consultancy: Neo-bureaucracy and the Consultant Manager

Andrew Sturdy, Christopher Wright and Nick Wylie

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS vii

Specialist expertise: the distinctive knowledge of the consultant manager	162
Playing the game: the political boundaries of the consultant manager	165
Interpersonal aspects of the consultant manager identity – targeting and using client trust and credibility	170
From stable ambivalence to rejection – the contradictions of being an ‘outsider within’	174
Conclusion	183
8 Conclusion	185
Introduction	185
Management as consultancy – an overview	185
New and old tensions	191
Consultancy as management – the external consultant is dead; long live the consultant manager?	198
Future research	200
Closing thoughts	202
Appendix 1: Details of UK interview respondents	203
Appendix 2: Details of Australian interview respondents	209
Appendix 3: Key features of UK internal consultancy units (ICUs)	213
Appendix 4: Data analysis on standardisation in UK and Australian case studies	217
References	221
Index	238