Documentary Culture and the Laity in the Early Middle Ages

Many more documents survive from the early Middle Ages than from the Roman Empire. Although ecclesiastical archives may account for the dramatic increase in the number of surviving documents, this new investigation reveals the scale and spread of documentary culture beyond the Church. The contributors explore the nature of the surviving documentation without preconceptions to show that we cannot infer changing documentary practices from patterns of survival. Throughout Late Antiquity and the early Middle Ages – from North Africa, Egypt, Italy, Francia and Spain to Anglo-Saxon England – people at all social levels, whether laity or clergy, landowners or tenants, farmers or royal functionaries, needed, used and kept documents. The story of documentary culture in the early medieval world emerges not as one of its capture by the Church, but rather of a response adopted by those who needed documents, as they reacted to a changing legal, social and institutional landscape.

WARREN C. BROWN is Professor of History at the California Institute of Technology.

MARIOS COSTAMBEYS is Senior Lecturer in History at the University of Liverpool.

MATTHEW INNES is Professor of History at Birkbeck, University of London.

This book is less a traditional edited volume than one result of a highly fruitful process of collaborative research. What began as a discussion over a pint in Princeton in November 2000 grew into an ever-widening e-mail exchange spanning eight time zones, and then a panel at Leeds (2002); formal workshops in London (2003), Pasadena (2004), Vienna (2005), Canterbury (2006) and Cambridge (2007); a panel at the Medieval Academy in Vancouver (2008); and finally – for the four editors – a remarkable series of group writing sessions, from which the introduction and conclusion emerged and the various parts were woven into a whole. From the beginning, the ten members of the Lay Archives Working Group, as we came to be called, were all frustrated by the increasingly outcomes-driven framework of much research in the humanities. We therefore banned all discussion of a collective publication until several years into the undertaking; our goals were, rather, undirected exploration of our common theme and intellectual exchange among a transatlantic network of younger scholars, most of whom did not know each other well or at all when we began. Various members did publish work separately as we progressed, but only when it became clear that we as a group had something potentially important to say did we turn to work on the present volume. This long process (punctuated by the arrival of eight children!) lies behind what we hope will be seen as a very well-integrated publication – not a set of papers, but a book with a collective voice and a common argument.

So as not to succumb to groupthink, from early on we invited other scholars to sit in on our workshops, and it is their probing questions, collegial suggestions and encouragement of our collective approach that we have the pleasure to acknowledge first: Rosamond McKitterick and Christina Pössel at London; Patrick Geary, Jason Glenn and Claudia Rapp in Pasadena; Walter Pohl, Peter Erhart and Bernhard Zeller in Vienna; and Geoff Koziol and Barbara Rosenwein, who served as commentators on the Vancouver panel. Koziol went on to serve as an extraordinarily incisive reader of our manuscript for Cambridge University Press. He pressed us to clarify our thinking and ultimately helped us to strengthen our collective argument. We also thank the other (anonymous) reader for that press, as well as readers for what was an unsuccessful grant application along the way.

Our meetings received institutional support from Birkbeck College, University of London; the California Institute of Technology; the Huntington Library; the Institut für Mittelalterforschung (Vienna); the Austrian Academy of Sciences; and Cambridge University – not to mention the home institutions of the individual authors that paid for much of the transatlantic travel. Funding from the British Academy (via an International Network Award) and the Leverhulme Trust (via some of the funding awarded as a Philip Leverhulme Prize) proved vital in getting the project off the ground.

We dedicate this book to our mentors, formal and informal, who taught us to value collaboration over competition.
