

Reforming Ideas in Britain

Between 1789 and 1815 Britain faced a surge of challenges brought about by the French Revolution. Growing tensions with France, then the outbreak of war, exacerbated domestic political controversy, giving rise to new forms of political protest, to which the government responded with ever-increasing severity. Reforming Ideas in Britain brings together a series of essays to provide a vibrant historiography of Britain's political thought and movements during the 1790s and beyond. Challenging traditional perceptions of the period, Mark Philp prompts us to reconsider the weight of various ideas, interpretations and explanations of British politics and language, showing us instead that this dynamic world of popular politics was at once more chaotic, innovative and open-minded than historians have typically perceived it to be. This is an essential interdisciplinary text for scholars of history, political theory and romanticism that offers a fresh perspective on radicalism, loyalism and republicanism in Britain during the French Revolution.

MARK PHILP is Professor of History and Politics in the Department of History, University of Warwick.

Reforming Ideas in Britain

Politics and Language in the Shadow of the French Revolution, 1789–1815

Mark Philp

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge University Press & Assessment
978-1-107-02728-2 — Reforming Ideas in Britain
Mark Philp
Frontmatter
More Information

Shaftesbury Road, Cambridge CB2 8EA, United Kingdom
One Liberty Plaza, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10006, USA
477 Williamstown Road, Port Melbourne, VIC 3207, Australia
314–321, 3rd Floor, Plot 3, Splendor Forum, Jasola District Centre, New Delhi – 110025, India
103 Penang Road, #05–06/07, Visioncrest Commercial, Singapore 238467

Cambridge University Press is part of Cambridge University Press & Assessment, a department of the University of Cambridge.

We share the University's mission to contribute to society through the pursuit of education, learning and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9781107027282

© Mark Philp 2014

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press & Assessment.

First published 2014

First paperback edition 2017

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

ISBN 978-1-107-02728-2 Hardback

ISBN 978-1-316-64849-0 Paperback

Cambridge University Press & Assessment has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

G. A. C. 1941–2009
Pauca tecum velim

Contents

List of figures	page viii
List of tables	ix
Acknowledgements	x
Introduction	1
1 The fragmented ideology of reform	11
2 Vulgar conservatism 1792/3	40
3 Disconcerting ideas: explaining popular radicalism and popular loyalism in the 1790s	71
4 English republicanism in the 1790s	102
5 Failing the republic: political virtue and vice in the late eighteenth century	133
6 Paine's experiments	158
7 Revolutionaries in Paris: Paine and Jefferson	187
8 Godwin, Thelwall and the means of progress	210
9 Politics and memory: Nelson and Trafalgar in popular song	232
10 The elusive principle: collective self-determination in the late eighteenth century	260
11 Time to talk	287
Index	313

Figures

- Figure 6.1 Exercises in globes: the use of candle and globes to demonstrate the motions of the planets page 167
- Figure 6.2 Tree and fountain 175

Tables

Table 3.1 Types of explanation	page 77
Table 3.2 Classification of accounts by type of explanation	78

Acknowledgements

My thanks are registered in many of these essays to those who were helpful at the time of writing, and I wish to reiterate those thanks while also singling out several people with whom I have worked and argued over the time it took to write these essays. Richard Fisher at Cambridge University Press was involved in the first of these essays and has been a stalwart supporter subsequently, enabling this collection to appear. My 1790s ‘colleagues’ – especially John Barrell, Martin Fitzpatrick, Kevin Gilmartin, Harriet Guest, Iain McCalman, Jon Mee, David O’Shaughnessy and Gillian Russell – have been a long-standing and endlessly stimulating group to work with, and have introduced me to new generations of scholars from whose work I have also learnt much. I also learnt a great deal from the reading group set up initially by Bonnie Honig from Northwestern and involving my politics colleagues, Lois McNay, Liz Frazer, Michael Freedon, and Mark Stears. My family, especially my children, Joe, Ruth and Hannah, who used to distract me from work, have graduated into some of my sharpest critics, for which I am doubly grateful. I especially want to thank Jo Innes, who has been an Oxford ‘half-colleague’ (given our different disciplinary locations) but who has consistently prodded me to think more carefully about a range of topics over the last twenty years, and has been unfailingly ‘up’ for talking through new ideas and projects. Some of the fruits of our joint project ‘Re-imagining democracy 1750–1850’ are evident in the later essays in this volume. I have also benefited from support from the Department of Politics and International Relations in the final months of the completion of this book, and would like to thank Dustin Kramer and Robert Cane for help preparing some of the text. Thanks are also due to Cambridge University Press’s Mike Richardson for his scrupulous attention to the text and Gaia Poggiogalli for her tolerance.

Several of these essays were first published elsewhere. They remain essentially unchanged, save for the correction of mistakes and adjustments to create a uniform style in the footnotes. Chapters 5, 10 and 11 have not previously been published. My thanks are due to the publishers and the editors for allowing me to reprint them. The details of how the essays appeared previously are as follows.

- Chapter 1: ‘The fragmented ideology of reform’, in Mark Philp, ed., The French Revolution and British Popular Politics (Cambridge University Press, 1991), 50–77.
- Chapter 2: ‘Vulgar conservatism, 1792–3’, English Historical Review 110 (1995), 42–69 (© Oxford University Press).
- Chapter 3: ‘Disconcerting ideas: explaining popular radicalism and popular loyalism in the 1790s’, in Glenn Burgess and Matthew Festenstein, eds., English Radicalism, 1550–1850 (Cambridge University Press, 2007), 157–89.
- Chapter 4: ‘English republicanism in the 1790s’, Journal of Political Philosophy 6 (1998), 235–62 (© Wiley-Blackwell).
- Chapter 6: ‘Paine and science’, Enlightenment and Dissent 17 (1998), 210–49 (© University of British Columbia).
- Chapter 7: ‘Revolutionaries in Paris: Paine, Jefferson and democracy’, in Simon P. Newman and Peter S. Onuf, eds., Paine and Jefferson in the Age of Revolutions (Charlottesville: University of Virginia Press, 2013).
- Chapter 8: ‘Godwin, Thelwall, and the means of progress’, in Robert M. Maniquis and Victoria Myers, eds., Godwinian Moments: From the Enlightenment to Romanticism (University of Toronto Press, 2011), 59–82.
- Chapter 9: ‘Politics and memory: Nelson and Trafalgar in popular song’, in David Cannadine, ed., Trafalgar in History: A Battle and Its Afterlife (Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan, 2006), 93–120.