THE STATE OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL HUMAN RIGHTS

This edited volume offers original scholarship on economic and social human rights from leading and new cutting-edge scholars in the fields of economics, law, political science, sociology, and anthropology. It analyzes the core economic and social rights and the crucial topic of nondiscrimination, and includes an innovative section on “meta” rights. The main chapters answer important questions about economic and social rights performance around the world by emphasizing the obstacles that prevent governments from fulfilling their obligations. The book’s introductory and concluding chapters address conceptual issues and correct mistakes often made by critics of economic and social rights. All together the interdisciplinary analysis offers a detailed and up-to-date discussion to help scholars and policy makers find the best ways to instantiate economic and social rights.

Lanse Minkler is an Associate Professor of Economics at the University of Connecticut, and former Director of Socio-Economic Rights and Co-Founder of the Economic and Social Right Research Group at the university’s Human Rights Institute. His earlier research concerned worker knowledge contributions and worker motivations and the intersection between ethics and economics, which resulted in his book Integrity and Agreement: Economics When Principles Also Matter (2008). His current research interests center on human rights, particularly on the right to work, and constitutionalizing economic and social rights. He coedited Economic Rights: Conceptual, Measurement, and Policy Issues (with Shareen Hertel, 2007), and has published in top human rights journals.

Acknowledgments

Most of the chapters in this volume originated from the annual workshop of the Economic and Social Rights Research Group (ESRG) at the University of Connecticut (UConn) in April 2011. Comprised of UConn faculty, students, and affiliated faculty from around the country and sponsored by UConn's Human Rights Institute, the ESRG is devoted to the interdisciplinary study of economic and social human rights. I feel lucky to be part of such an unusual and interesting intellectual community. I especially thank my colleague and co-organizer Shareen Hertel, not only for her help on this project, but also for her vision and energy in co-founding and guiding the ESRG.

I thank all of the authors of this volume, both ESRG members and not, for their careful development of each chapter. All chapters went through a significant revision process; some were revised many times. I am grateful that all of the authors approached the editing process in a cooperative spirit and seriously entertained suggestions, even when they disagreed.

Richard Wilson is the Director of the Human Rights Institute and I appreciate his ongoing support of the ESRG. I also thank Davita Silfen Glasberg, Fe Delos-Santos, Michael Freeman, and Kristy A. Belton for their help and suggestions. Finally, I am grateful to Cambridge University Press editor John Berger not only for his support of this project, but also for his support of economic and social human rights more generally.
