

CONTENTS

Preface and Acknowledgements	page ix
List of Abbreviations	xii
Introduction	I
1 Rationality and Irrationality, Philosophy and Religion	10
1.1 Rationality and Irrationality	10
1.2 Some Promising Candidates? Milesians, Hippocratics and Myth-Critics	19
1.3 Philosophy and Religion	36
1.4 Rationality and Irrationality: Religious Belief	48
1.5 Hesiod and Philosophy	52
2 Hesiodic Epistemology	61
2.1 Semantic Overview: pseudea , alêthea , etyma , homoia	65
2.2 The Muses' Address and Divine Dispensation in Hesiod	72
2.3 The Theogony : Conclusions	90
2.4 Epistemological Optimism in the Works and Days and Final Remarks	95
3 Xenophanes on Divine Disclosure and Mortal Inquiry	104
3.1 Divination	108
3.2 Against a Notion of Disclosure	116
3.3 Setting the Limits	128
3.4 Divine Disclosure and Mortal Inquiry	133
3.5 A52 Revisited: A Clean Sweep?	144
Introduction to the Chapters on Parmenides	155
4 Why Did Parmenides Write Doxa ?	163
4.1 Approaches to the Aetiological Question	163
4.2 Parmenides' Theory of Human Cognition	169
4.3 Cognition, krisis , Sense-Perception	183
4.4 Ineluctability and Volition in the Mortal's Relation to Doxa	196
4.5 Conclusions: Why Did Parmenides Write Doxa ?	215
	vii

Contents

5	How Could Parmenides Have Written Alêtheia ?	222
5.1	Recap and Introduction: Some Resolutions of the Paradoxical Implications of Parmenides’ Theory of Human Cognition	222
5.2	Parmenides on the Soul: Hot Metempsychosis and the Physiology of Divinisation	227
5.3	The Proem in Its Time and Place	250
5.4	Conclusions: How Could Parmenides Have Written Alêtheia ?	277
5.5	The Ontological Question; Being, Intelligence and Intelligibility in Alêtheia	285
6	Retrospect and Prospect	309
6.1	Interrelations	309
6.2	The daimôn and Muse of Empedocles	318
6.3	Final Remarks: Reason and Revelation, Philosophy and Religion Again	339
	Appendix	347
	Bibliography	360
	Index Locorum	387
	General Index	399