EUCHARIST AND THE POETIC IMAGINATION IN EARLY MODERN ENGLAND

The Reformation changed for ever how the sacrament of the eucharist was understood. This study of six canonical early modern lyric poets traces the literary afterlife of what was one of the greatest doctrinal shifts in English history. Sophie Read argues that the move from a literal to a figurative understanding of the phrase 'this is my body' exerted a powerful imaginative pull on successive generations. To illustrate this, she examines in detail the work of Southwell, Donne, Herbert, Crashaw, Vaughan and Milton, who between them represent a broad range of doctrinal and confessional positions, from the Jesuit Southwell to Milton's heterodox Puritanism. Individually, each chapter examines how eucharistic ideas are expressed through a particular rhetorical trope; together, they illuminate the continued importance of the eucharist's transformation well into the seventeenth century – not simply as a matter of doctrine, but as a rhetorical and poetic mode.

SOPHIE READ is a University Lecturer in English and Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge.

IDEAS IN CONTEXT

Edited by David Armitage, Richard Bourke, Jennifer Pitts
and John Robertson

The books in this series will discuss the emergence of intellectual traditions and of related new disciplines. The procedures, aims and vocabularies that were generated will be set in the context of the alternatives available within the contemporary frameworks of ideas and institutions. Through detailed studies of the evolution of such traditions, and their modification by different audiences, it is hoped that a new picture will form of the development of ideas in their concrete contexts. By this means, artificial distinctions between the history of philosophy, of the various sciences, of society and politics, and of literature may be seen to dissolve.

The series is published with the support of the Exxon Foundation.

A list of books in the series will be found at the end of the volume.

Acknowledgements

Working on a book for many years naturally results in the incurring of many debts of various kinds. They deserve far greater acknowledgement than I can give here, but I would like nonetheless to record some specific thanks along with a more general sense of gratitude and good fortune. This project started life as a doctoral thesis, and so I owe a great deal to Jessica Martin; she was, throughout, a generous and exacting supervisor, and I benefited greatly from her scholarship and judgement. I was lucky to have advice and encouragement at this time from Colin Burrow, Simon Jarvis and Peter McCullough; Brian Cummings and Raphael Lyne examined the thesis, made invaluable suggestions for rethinking and revision, and have remained important and supportive presences ever since.

The next stage of the project was overseen with exemplary tact by the book's first editor, Richard Fisher; I owe much to his experience, and to the patience and generosity of the board of Ideas in Context, in particular Quentin Skinner. Elizabeth Friend-Smith, who took over when Richard Fisher was translated to higher things, has been a model of efficiency and helpfulness, as have Elizabeth Spicer, Caroline Mowatt, Carol Fellingham Webb and Mary Dalton. I should record, too, my gratitude to Cambridge University Press's anonymous readers, whose objections, corrections and suggestions – delivered with varying degrees of stern benevolence – have been invaluable. They, and the book's other readers, have saved me from grave error and embarrassment; the flaws and faults that remain are of course my own.

For the past few years I have been teaching very happily at Christ's, and I would like to thank the Master and Fellows, particularly my close colleagues – Gavin Alexander, Helen Thaventhiran and Daniel Wakelin; Susan Bayly, David Reynolds and Caroline Vout – for making the college such a warm environment to work in, and for granting me a term's leave in which to make revisions on the book manuscript. More recently, my colleagues at the English Faculty in Cambridge have offered help, advice and generous support; I should thank Helen Cooper and John Kerrigan specifically in this regard.

My debts of friendship are legion. Alison Davidson, my inspirational sixth-form English teacher, deserves special thanks for some foundational early encouragement. For their support and their society, I'd like to thank those who have taught, studied and worked with me: Ned Allen, Sara Crangle, Sarah Haggarty, Sam Ladkin, Leo Mellor, Ian Patterson, William Poole, Henry Power and Zoë Svendsen have each been more important than such a list implies. My good friends Mel Bach, Joanna Cook, Katherine Harloe, Tom Lee, Polly McMichael and Rose Taylor have offered continual encouragement, as well as endless diversion and happy times. I must record particular debts of gratitude to Rebecca Barr, Rowan Boyson, Michael Bywater, Louise Joy, Jane Partner and Neil Pattison for all of the above, for more material help of the reading and proof-reading kinds, and for the correspondence, conversation and friendship that has meant so much to me over the past few years. For his quiet good humour and loving helpfulness, I owe my husband, Jonathan Morgan, far more than I can say.

Finally, I would like to express my love, thanks and obligation to my parents, David Read and Priscilla Read, for their generous support, without which this project would never have been finished; also to my wonderful sisters, Emily Read and Olivia Read, for their affection and forbearance, and the pleasure and instruction of their company. It is to my family that this, my first book, is dedicated.

Note on the Text

With the exceptions of Southwell, where I have used a variety of early and contemporary editions, and Milton, where I have quoted from the twelve-book Paradise Lost (1674), I have preferred the standard Clarendon Press editions of authors' works. I have retained original spelling and punctuation, though I have modernised the <i/j> and <v/u> diagraphs in quotations from both early printed books and more recent editions where old conventions were retained.
