Religion in a Liberal State

The place and significance of religion in public life has become increasingly contested and legally regulated. Fudged compromises of the past are giving way to a desire for clear lines and moral principles. This book brings the disciplines of law, sociology, politics and theology into conversation with one another to shed light on the questions thrown up by 'religion in a liberal state'. It discusses practical problems in a British context, such as the accommodation of religious dress, discrimination against sexual minorities and state support for historic religions; considers legal frameworks of equality and human rights; and elucidates leading ideas of neutrality, pluralism, secularism and public reason. Fundamentally, it asks what it means to be liberal in a world in which religious diversity is becoming more present and more problematic.

GAVIN D'COSTA is Professor of Catholic Theology at the University of Bristol.

MALCOLM EVANS is Professor of Public International Law at the University of Bristol.

TARIQ MODOOD is Professor of Sociology, Politics and Public Policy, and Director of the Centre for the Study of Ethnicity and Citizenship at the University of Bristol.

JULIAN RIVERS is Professor of Jurisprudence at the University of Bristol Law School.

Acknowledgements

In bringing this volume together, we have incurred a number of debts of gratitude. To the executors of Dr Derek Zutshi's bequest, and in particular Mr Patrick Zutshi, for their enthusiastic support of this project; to Laura Serratrice and Alison Dawson for their help in establishing the lectures and symposium; to Aleksandra Lewicki for practical help in running the event; to Emma Harris for assistance in preparing the manuscript for publication; and finally to our fellow participants and contributors for their willingness to continue conversing across those unhelpful disciplinary boundaries.
