

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-04663-4 - An Exiled Generation: German and Hungarian Refugees of Revolution,
1848–1871

Heléna Tóth

Table of Contents

More information

Contents

List of figures and tables	page ix
Acknowledgments	x
A note on names and translations	xiii
List of abbreviations	xiv
Introduction: “our story belongs to you”	1
Exile and other forms of migration	8
Exile and the legacy of the revolution	16
1 Leaving	20
Exile: the fate of many	23
Exile: voluntary banishment	46
Exile: too close to home	63
Moving on	73
2 “What good does it do to ruin our family?”	78
The family as lobby: the case of Johannes Reichle, the innkeeper of Tuttlingen	82
The family as argument: strategies and structures of petitions for amnesty	98
Families in exile	104
3 Exile as a profession, professions in exile	114
Exile as a profession	120
Professions in exile	141
Medicine	142
Military officers	156
4 The roots of the uprooted: émigré networks	167
Bern, Geneva	172

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-04663-4 - An Exiled Generation: German and Hungarian Refugees of Revolution,
1848–1871

Heléna Tóth

Table of Contents

More information

viii

Contents

	Istanbul	185
	London	191
	New York, Boston	202
5	Returning	214
	Amnesty: the creative process of forgiving and forgetting, 1848–1867	217
	Amnesty: the long road home – émigrés and the places they had left behind	237
	The living conscience of the revolution: those who never returned	249
	Conclusion	256
	Bibliography	266
	Index	288