The Huguenots of Paris and the Coming of Religious Freedom, 1685–1789

How did the Huguenots of Paris survive, and even prosper, in the eighteenth century when the majority Catholic population was notorious for its hostility to Protestantism? Why, by the end of the Old Regime, did public opinion overwhelmingly favour giving Huguenots greater rights? This study of the growth of religious toleration in Paris traces the specific history of the Huguenots after Louis XIV revoked the Edict of Nantes in 1685. David Garrioch identifies the roots of this transformation of attitudes towards the minority Huguenot population in their own methods of resistance to persecution and pragmatic government responses to it, as well as in the particular environment of Paris. Above all, this book identifies the extraordinary shift in Catholic religious culture that took place over the century as a significant cause of change, set against the backdrop of cultural and intellectual transformation that we call the Enlightenment.

DAVID GARRIOCH is Professor of History at Monash University. He has written widely on the social history of Paris in the eighteenth century, including The Making of Revolutionary Paris (2002), which won the NSW Premier's Prize for History in 2003.

Acknowledgments

This book would not exist without the support of my wonderful colleagues in the Department of History at Monash University. Active researchers and dedicated teachers, they have provided a stimulating intellectual environment and have willingly covered the sometimes prolonged absences that an archivally based historical study requires. Several of them also read and commented with kindness and acuity on draft sections of this book. Tim Tackett and Wallace Kirsop generously read the whole manuscript, saved me from many errors, and made me think hard about my interpretations. I am also grateful to the anonymous Cambridge University Press readers for their invaluable suggestions.

I have received assistance from a great many people in France while working on this book, first and foremost from Daniel Roche and Robert Descimon, whose work has long been a source of inspiration, whose seminars have opened my eyes to many new ideas, and whose support and friendship have been constant. I owe a particular debt to Laurence Crog, Nicolas Lyon-Caen and Mathieu Marraud for innumerable fruitful discussions and for archival tips and shared material. They and many others have extended generous friendship to me and my family. A number of other French colleagues, experts on French Protestantism, have been very generous with their time and advice. Michelle Magdelaine read and commented on some of my work, gently corrected my errors and gave me useful contacts; Patrick Cabanel invited me to speak to his students and offered welcome advice; and Gwenaëlle Léonus-Lieppe, also working on Paris Protestants, has been a model of generosity, allowing me to consult her work ahead of its publication. Jean-Pierre Poussou kindly allowed me to consult work done by his students. Tim LeGoff and Robert Nelson provided me with source material that I would not have found on my own.

The archival work on which this book is based would have been impossible without funding from the Australian Research Council and study leave from Monash University. Both the research and the writing benefited immeasurably from fellowships at the École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales in Paris and at the Université de Toulouse II-Le Mirail, which enabled me to try out ideas and meet colleagues working on related subjects, and for which I particularly thank Robert Descimon and Jean-Marc Olivier respectively.

I have had wonderful research assistance from Zoe Potter, Marie Lopez and especially James Cannon, and technical help from Kathleen Neal.

Many other people, too numerous to name individually, have made it possible for a historian based in Australia to work on the history of eighteenth-century Paris: administrative staff in the History Department and the Arts Faculty at Monash University; staff at the Monash University Library, particularly in acquisitions and inter-library loans; librarians and archivists at almost every archival depot in Paris. My family have been a model of tolerance, putting up with my numerous absences, physical and mental. No one has contributed more than Jan Pinder, to whom I dedicate this book.
