

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

Africa and World War II

This volume considers the military, economic, and political significance of Africa during World War II. The essays feature new research and innovative approaches to the historiography of Africa and bring to the fore issues of race, gender, and labor during the war, topics that have not yet received much critical attention. It explores the experiences of male and female combatants, peasant producers, women traders, missionaries, and sex workers. The first section offers three introductory essays that give a continent-wide overview of how Africa sustained the Allied effort through labor and resources. The six sections that follow offer individual case studies from different parts of the continent. Contributors offer a macro and micro view of the multiple levels on which Africa's contributions shaped the war as well as the ways in which the war affected individuals and communities and transformed Africa's political, economic, and social landscape.

Judith A. Byfield is Associate Professor of History at Cornell University, teaching African and Caribbean history. She is coeditor of Gendering the African Diaspora: Women, Culture and Historical Change in the Caribbean and Nigerian Hinterland (2010) and author of The Bluest Hands: A Social and Economic History of Women Indigo Dyers in Western Nigeria, 1890–1940 (2002). She is a former president of the African Studies Association (2011) and is on the editorial board of the Blacks in the Diaspora series published by Indiana University Press.

Carolyn A. Brown is Associate Professor of History at Rutgers University. She is the author of We Are All Slaves: African Miners, Culture, and Resistance at the Enugu Government Colliery, Nigeria, 1914–1950 (2001). She is coeditor, with Paul Lovejoy, of Repercussions of the Atlantic Slave Trade: The Interior of the Bight of Biafra and the African Diaspora (2010). She is on the editorial board of Cambridge University Press's African Studies series and is a senior editor of the labor journal International Labor and Working Class History.

Timothy Parsons holds a joint appointment as Professor of African History in the history department and in the African and African American studies program at Washington University in St. Louis, where he also directs the international and area studies program. His primary publications include The Rule of Empires: Those Who Built Them, Those Who Endured Them, and Why They Always Fall (2010); Race, Resistance and the Boy Scout Movement in British Colonial Africa (2004); and The 1964 Army Mutinies and the Making of Modern East Africa (2003).

Ahmad Alawad Sikainga is Professor of History at the Ohio State University. He is the author of City of Steel and Fire: A Social History of Atbara, Sudan's Railway Town, 1906–1984 (2002); Slaves into Workers: Emancipation and Labor in Colonial Sudan (1996); Western Bahr al-Ghazal under British Rule, 1898–1956 (1990); and Sudan Defense Force: Origin and Role, 1925–1955 (1983). He is coeditor of Post-War Reconstruction in Africa (2006) and Civil War in Sudan (1993).

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

---

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

Africa and World War II

Edited by

JUDITH A. BYFIELD

Cornell University

CAROLYN A. BROWN

Rutgers University–New Brunswick

TIMOTHY PARSONS

Washington University in St. Louis

AHMAD ALAWAD SIKAINGA

Ohio State University

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

32 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10013-2473, USA

Cambridge University Press is part of the University of Cambridge.

It furthers the University's mission by disseminating knowledge in the pursuit of education, learning, and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9781107630222

© Cambridge University Press 2015

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2015

Printed in the United States of America

A catalog record for this publication is available from the British Library.

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Africa and World War II / Judith Byfield, Cornell University, Carolyn A. Brown, Rutgers University–New Brunswick, Timothy Parsons, Washington University in St. Louis, Ahmad Sikainga, Ohio State University.

pages cm

ISBN 978-1-107-05320-5 (hardback) – ISBN 978-1-107-63022-2 (Paperback)

I. World War, 1939–1945 – Africa. 2. Africa – History – 1884–1960. I. Byfield, Judith A. (Judith Ann-Marie), editor, author. II. Brown, Carolyn A. (Carolyn Anderson), 1944– editor, author. III. Parsons, Timothy, 1962– editor, author. IV. Sikainga, Ahmad Alawad, editor, author.

D766.8.A473 2015

940.53'6–dc23 2014027894

ISBN 978-1-107-05320-5 Hardback

ISBN 978-1-107-63022-2 Paperback

Additional resources for this publication at <http://www.cambridge.org/academic/subjects/history/african-history/africa-and-world-war-ii>

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party Internet Web sites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such Web sites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga

Frontmatter

More information

---

*We would like to dedicate this volume to several mentors, colleagues, and friends who passed in 2014: Jacob Ade Ajayi, George Bond, Patrick Chabal, Ali Mazuri, and Ivor Wilks.
Together they helped pioneer the field of African Studies and we hope to continue in their footsteps.*

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

---

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
FrontmatterMore information

Contents

List of Contributors	page xi
Acknowledgments	xv
Preface	xvii
Judith A. Byfield
ONE. INTRODUCTION
1 The Military Experiences of Ordinary Africans in World War II	3
Timothy Parsons
2 Producing for the War	24
Judith A. Byfield
3 African Labor in the Making of World War II	43
Carolyn A. Brown
TWO. COLONIAL SUBJECTS AND IMPERIAL ARMIES
4 The Military, Race, and Resistance: The Conundrums of Recruiting Black South African Men during the Second World War	71
Louis Grundlingh
5 The Moroccan “Effort de Guerre” in World War II	89
Driss Maghraoui
6 Free to Coerce: Forced Labor during and after the Vichy Years in French West Africa	109
Catherine Bogosian Ash
7 No Country Fit for Heroes: The Plight of Disabled Kenyan Veterans	127
Timothy Parsons

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
FrontmatterMore information

viii

*Contents*THREE. MOBILIZING COMMUNITIES AND RESOURCES FOR THE WAR EFFORT

- 8 Women, Rice, and War: Political and Economic Crisis in Wartime Abeokuta (Nigeria) 147
Judith A. Byfield
- 9 Africa's "Battle for Rubber" in the Second World War 166
William G. Clarence-Smith
- 10 Freetown and World War II: Strategic Militarization,
Accommodation, and Resistance 183
Allen M. Howard
- 11 Extraction and Labor in Equatorial Africa and Cameroon
under Free French Rule 200
Eric T. Jennings
- 12 The Portuguese African Colonies during the Second World War 220
Malyn Newitt
- 13 World War II and the Transformation of the Tanzanian
Forests 238
Thaddeus Sunseri

FOUR. RACE, GENDER, AND SOCIAL CHANGE IN A TIME OF WAR

- 14 Wrestling with Race on the Eve of Human Rights: The British Management of the Color Line in Post-Fascist
Eritrea 259
Giulia Barrera
- 15 To Be Treated as a Man: Wartime Struggles over Masculinity, Race, and Honor in the Nigerian Coal
Industry 276
Carolyn A. Brown
- 16 "A White Man's War": Settler Masculinity in the Union
Defense Force, 1939–1945 303
Suryakanthie Chetty
- 17 African Soldiers, French Women, and Colonial Fears during and after World War II 324
Ruth Ginio
- 18 World War II and the Sex Trade in British West Africa 339
Carina Ray

FIVE. EXPERIENCING WAR IN AFRICA AND EUROPE

- 19 American Missions in Wartime French West Africa:
Travails of the Sudan Interior Mission in Niger 359
Barbara M. Cooper

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga

Frontmatter

More information

Contents		ix
20	Fighting Fascism: Ethiopian Women Patriots 1935–1941 Hailu Habtu and Judith A. Byfield	383
21	Defending the Lands of Their Ancestors: The African American Military Experience in Africa during World War II Daniel Hutchinson	401
22	French African Soldiers in German POW Camps, 1940–1945 Raffael Scheck	420
SIX. WORLD WAR II AND ANTICOLONIALISM
23	Popular Resistance and Anticolonial Mobilization: The War Effort in French Guinea Elizabeth Schmidt	441
24	Sudanese Popular Response to World War II Ahmad Alawad Sikainga	462
25	Ugandan Politics and World War II (1939–1949) Carol Summers	480
SEVEN. CONCLUSION
26	Conclusion: Consequences of the War Ahmad Alawad Sikainga	501
	Index	509

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

---

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

List of Contributors

Giulia Barrera, Directorate General of Archives, Rome, Italy

An archivist and an Africanist historian, Barrera has published finding aids and articles on archival matters as well as articles on interracial sexual relations, mixed race children, women's history, and the construction of racial hierarchies in colonial Eritrea.

Catherine Bogosian Ash, Independent Scholar, Detroit, MI, USA

Bogosian Ash has taught courses on the history of women, colonialism, and popular culture and protest in Africa at Wayne State University. She has published articles on forced labor in French West Africa and the evolution of a labor army in postcolonial Mali.

Carolyn A. Brown, Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ, USA

An historian of labor slavery and urban social history, Brown's publications include We Are All Slaves: African Miners, Culture, and Resistance at the Enugu Government Colliery, Nigeria, 1914–1950 (Heinemann, 2003), which won the Book of the Year Prize from the International Labor History Association, and the coedited volume with Paul Lovejoy, Repercussions of the Atlantic Slave Trade: The Interior of the Bight of Biafra and the African Diaspora (Africa World Press, 2011).

Judith A. Byfield, Cornell University, Ithaca, NY, USA

An associate professor of African history, Byfield's publications include The Bluest Hands: A Social and Economic History of Women Indigo Dyers in Western Nigeria, 1890–1940 (Heinemann, 2002) and Cross Currents: Building Bridges Across American and Nigerian Studies (Bookbuilders [Nigeria], 2009).

Suryakanthie Chetty, University of South Africa, Pretoria, South Africa

Chetty teaches courses on colonial South African and African history as well as courses on "Empires of the Modern World." She has published articles

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

xii

List of Contributors

on settler masculinity and South African propaganda practices during the Second World War.

William G. Clarence-Smith, School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, London, UK

A professor of the economic history of Asia and Africa and chief editor of the Journal of Global History, Clarence-Smith's publications include Slaves, Peasants and Capitalists in Southern Angola, 1840–1926 (Cambridge University Press, 1979) and Islam and the Abolition of Slavery (Oxford University Press, 2006).

Barbara M. Cooper, Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ, USA

A professor of history, Cooper's publications include Marriage in Maradi: Gender and Culture in a Hausa Society in Niger, 1900–1989 (Heinemann, 1997) and Evangelical Christians in the Muslim Sahel (Indiana University Press, 2006), for which she won the Melville J. Herskovits Prize of the African Studies Association.

Ruth Ginio, Ben Gurion University, Negev, Israel

Ginio, a professor of history, is the author of French Colonialism Unmasked: The Vichy Years in French West Africa (University of Nebraska Press, 2006) and coeditor of Shadows of War: A Social History of Silence in the Twentieth Century (Cambridge University Press, 2010).

Louis Grundlingh, University of Johannesburg, Johannesburg, South Africa

A professor in the department of historical studies, Grundlingh teaches courses on urban history and the history of leisure and has published numerous articles on the racial and politicized experiences of black South African soldiers who participated in the Second World War.

Hailu Habtu, Institute of Ethiopian Studies, Addis Ababa University, Addis Ababa, Ethiopia

As a senior research Fellow, Habtu has published widely on Ethiopian Christianity, language, and culture. He also teaches graduate courses on Ethiopian oral and written literature.

Allen M. Howard, Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ, USA

Professor emeritus of history, Howard is the coauthor of Community Leadership and the Transformation of Freetown, 1801–1976 (Mouton, 1978) and coeditor of The Spatial Factor in African History: The Relationship of the Social, Material, and Perceptual (Brill, 2005).

Daniel Hutchinson, Belmont Abbey College, Belmont, NC, USA

Hutchinson, an assistant professor of history, teaches courses on the history of the United States, African American history, military history, race, and ethnicity, as well as on U.S. foreign relations. He has published articles on the experiences of prisoners of war during World War I in Alabama.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga

Frontmatter

More informationList of Contributors

xiii

Eric T. Jennings, University of Toronto, Toronto, Canada

A professor of history, Jennings's publications include Vichy in the Tropics (Stanford University Press, 2001), Curing the Colonizers (Duke University Press, 2006), and Imperial Heights: Dalat and the Making and Undoing of French Indochina (University of California Press, 2011). He has also received the Alf Heggoy and Jean-François Coste book prizes.

Driss Maghraoui, Al Akhawayn University, Ifrane, Morocco

Maghraoui, a professor of history and international relations, has published numerous articles and chapters and is the editor of Revisiting the Colonial Past in Morocco (Routledge, 2003).

Malyn Newitt, King's College London, London, UK

Professor emeritus of history, Newitt's publications include, A History of Mozambique (Indiana University Press, 1995) and Portuguese Overseas Expansion, 1400–1668 (Routledge, 2004).

Timothy Parsons, Washington University, St. Louis, MO, USA

Parsons, a professor of African and African American studies, is the author of The Second British Empire: In the Crucible of the Twentieth Century (Rowan & Littlefield, 2014) and Race, Resistance, and the Boy Scout Movement in British Colonial Africa (Ohio University Press, 2004).

Carina Ray, Fordham University, Bronx, NY, USA

An associate professor of African and the Black Atlantic history, Ray is the author of Crossing the Color Line: Race, Sex, and the Contested Politics of Colonialism in Ghana (Ohio University Press, 2015) and coeditor of Darfur and the Crisis of Governance in Sudan (Cornell University Press, 2009).

Raffael Scheck, Colby College, Waterville, ME, USA

Scheck, a professor of history, is the author of Hitler's African Victims: The German Army Massacre of Black French Soldiers in 1940 (Cambridge University Press, 2006), Mothers of the Nation: Right-Wing Women in Weimar Germany (Berg Press, 2004), and French Colonial Soldiers in German Captivity during World War II (Cambridge University Press, 2014).

Elizabeth Schmidt, Loyola University Maryland, Baltimore, MD, USA

Schmidt, a professor of African History, is the author of several books, including Cold War and Decolonization in Guinea, 1946–1958 (Ohio University Press, 2007), for which she received the African Politics Conference Group's 2008 Best Book Award, and Mobilizing the Masses: Gender, Ethnicity, and Class in the Nationalist Movement in Guinea, 1939–1958 (Heinemann, 2005).

Ahmad Alawad Sikainga, Ohio State University, Columbus, OH, USA

A professor of history and African studies, Sikainga's publications include Slaves into Workers: Emancipation and Labor in Colonial Sudan (University

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

xiv

List of Contributors

of Texas Press, 1996) and City of Steel and Fire: A Social History of Atbara, Sudan's Railway Town, 1906–1984 (Heinemann, 2002).

Carol Summers, University of Richmond, Richmond, VA, USA

Summers, a professor of history and international studies, is author of Colonial Lessons: Africans' Education in Southern Rhodesia, 1918–1935 (Heinemann, 2002) and From Civilization to Segregation: Social Ideals and Social Control in Southern Rhodesia, 1890–1934 (Ohio University Press, 1994).

Thaddeus Sunseri, Colorado State University, Fort Collins, CO, USA

Sunseri, a professor of African history, is the author of Wielding the Ax: Scientific Forestry and Social Conflict in Tanzania, c. 1820–2000 (Ohio University Press, 2009), a finalist for the African Studies Association's 2010 Melville J. Herskovits Award, and Vilimani: Labor Migration and Rural Change in Early Colonial Tanzania, 1884–1915 (Heinemann, 2001).

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

Acknowledgments

This volume is the outcome of many discussions; a workshop at Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ, in 2008, Re-Evaluating Africa and World War II; a conference at Cornell in 2009, Re-Evaluating Africa and World War II; as well as the patience and good humor of many colleagues. A project of this magnitude is only successful because along the way many people and organizations decide that they want to help. To the tens of people who helped in multiple ways, big and small, we thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

We enjoyed support from three institutions over the course of this process – Rutgers University, Cornell University, and Columbia University. We must acknowledge the generosity in spirit and resources from the following departments, programs, and institutes. Rutgers University: ARESTY Research Center for Undergraduates; Center for Race and Ethnicity; Black Atlantic Seminar; Center for African Studies; the Rutgers University Libraries; Department of History; Dean, School of Arts and Sciences; Research Council, Office of Research and Economic Development; Vice President of Undergraduate Education; Vice President of Academic Affairs. Columbia University: Institute of African Studies. Cornell University: Africana Studies and Research Center; The Carl Becker House; De Bary Mellon Interdisciplinary Writing Group; John Henrik Clarke Library; Cornell Cinema; Cornell Society for the Humanities; Departments of Anthropology, Government, History, and Development Sociology; European Studies; Kroch Library, Division of Rare and Manuscript Collections; Mario Einaudi Center for International Studies; Feminist, Gender and Sexuality Studies; Institute for Comparative Modernities; and the Institute for Social Sciences.

We also owe an enormous debt to several individuals who went above and beyond the call of duty to ensure the success of the workshop and conference. They include: Jamila Crowther, Renée DeLancey, Shelley Feldman, Sandra Greene, Robert L. Harris, Salah Hassan, Raj Krishnan, Stacey Langwick, Nancy Lawler, Dan Magaziner, Fouad Makki, Gregg Mann, Kwame Siriboe,

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

---

xvi

Acknowledgments

Rebecca Snyder, and Nicolas van de Valle. Filmmakers Steve White and John F. Schwally shared their outstanding work 761st Tank Regiment and FDR's Secret Air Force, respectively, with our audiences. We are grateful to the presenters at both the workshop and the conference and to the many people who shared in the conversations and discussions.

Putting together a volume of this magnitude requires many eyes and many hands. LaRay Denzer merits extra thanks for adding her editorial acumen to the mix. She brought a critical second eye to the articles in this collection, while Laura Ann Twagira rendered order to the materials for the Web site and Naomi Bland and Moyagaye Bedward helped us stay on top of a tsunami of details. Our readers offered the right mix of encouragement and advice. Ashley Jackson at Kings College London and David Killingray provided insight and encouragement at critical moments. Although he subsequently left Cambridge University Press, we have to say a special "Thank you!" to Eric Crahan, who strongly encouraged us to pursue this project from the very beginning, and to his successor, William Hammell, who continued the support. Finally, we thank our families, who invariably shared all phases of this volume and probably do not want to hear another interesting story about World War II.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
FrontmatterMore information

Preface

Judith A. Byfield

The genesis of this volume was a simple Sunday morning conversation with Carolyn Brown. I had attended a preview of the first episode of Ken Burns's documentary, The War, at Dartmouth College, and I shared my observations with her. We both planned to include chapters on World War II in our respective monographs, and as we discussed our mutual concern with the largely superficial treatment of Africa in European and American accounts of World War II, and our conversion to the idea that World War II deserved much greater attention in African studies, the idea for a conference took root.

We convinced Gregg Mann and Ahmad Sikainga to join us as co-organizers in the project, and we brought together twenty-six participants from around the globe for a workshop at Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ, March 27–30, 2008. Following that workshop we organized a conference at Cornell University, September 18–20, 2009, as well as three panels at the 2010 meeting of the American Historical Association. This has been a long process, and along the way the composition of organizers changed as well; Gregg Mann left and Timothy Parsons joined us. In the multiple steps that brought us to this point, the numerous meetings and rewrites, our conviction in this project has been reinforced, for each of us learned something new at the end of the day.

Why Revisit World War II?

In the documentary The War, Ken Burns did an admirable job in illustrating the complexity and grand scale of World War II as well as the personal experiences of individuals who witnessed its horrors and victories. While fully deserving of the praise it garnered, the series also illustrates the concerns that drive this collaborative project – the inadequate attention to Africa's role in World War II. This early version of episode one importantly included discussion of Italy's invasion of Ethiopia in 1935 but then replicated the

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
FrontmatterMore information

xviii

Preface

standard discussion of the North Africa campaigns, largely focusing on the actions of Generals Montgomery and Rommel. The same is true in texts on the war. The continent and especially sub-Saharan Africa are absent from the major works such as The Second World War: A Complete History by Martin Gilbert and A World At Arms: A Global History of World War II by Gerhard Weinberg.<sup>1</sup> Unfortunately, this dominant narrative betrays a superficial understanding of the critical role that Africa and its peoples played in this war. This project seeks to intervene in this narrative by making available new scholarship that will facilitate a richer understanding of Africa's role and impact on this global conflict. In addition, this volume will bring the historiography of World War II and African historiography into greater dialogue as it illuminates the distinctive ways in which the drive to secure Africa's resources for the war shaped African lives and livelihoods.

A small but critical number of historians have focused on Africa's role in World War II;<sup>2</sup> however, most Africanist historians gloss over the period by giving a cursory discussion of the numbers of African troops in South Asia and Western Europe or treating it as just a prelude to nationalist movements in the postwar era. The contributors to this project argue that Africa's contribution to the war was signal to the Allied victory and that the war years require more systematic analysis for a number of reasons. The demands of the war brought unprecedented interventions into the daily lives of Africans by colonial powers and transformed social and economic relations within households and communities. Additionally, the new importance of the colonies for the war effort was not lost on the men and women who were put in the position of sacrificing their lives and economies to give others in Europe the freedoms that they did not enjoy. For men and women across the continent, the war was not just a distant event; rather, it transformed their lives, made them agents in a global struggle for democracy, and left an indelible imprint on their history. The contributors to the volume also utilize insights from a variety of fields of inquiry such as spatial analysis, gender

<sup>1</sup> Martin Gilbert, The Second World War: A Complete History (New York: Holt Paperbacks, 2004); Gerhard Weinberg, A World At Arms: A Global History of World War II (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2005).

<sup>2</sup> For example, see Myron Echenberg, Colonial Conscripts: The Tirailleurs Senegalais in French West Africa, 1857–1960 (Portsmouth, NH: Heinemann, 1991); Ashley Jackson, Botswana 1939–45: An African Country at War (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1999); David Killingray and Richard Rathbone (editors), Africa and the Second World War (New York: St. Martin's Press, 1986); Nancy Ellen Lawler, Soldiers, Airmen, Spies and Whisperers: The Gold Coast in World War II (Athens: Ohio University Press, 2002); Gregory Mann, Native Sons: West African Veterans and France in the Twentieth Century (Durham: Duke University Press, 2006); G. O. Olusanya, The Second World War and Politics in Nigeria, 1939–1953 (London: Evans Bros. for University of Lagos Press, 1979); Timothy Parsons, The African Rank-and-File: Social Implications of Colonial Military Service in the Kings Rifles, 1902–1964 (Portsmouth, NH: Heinemann, 1999).

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
FrontmatterMore informationPreface

xix

studies, cultural studies, and environmental history. Consequently, this volume will help chart new ways of thinking about and capturing Africa's role in World War II.

Africa and World War II

The contributions to this volume highlight three critical issues – periodization, colonial policies, and the impact of the war on African individuals and communities. Periodization is critical in understanding the consequences the war imposed on African communities as well as Africa's impact on critical moments during the war. Contributors identify signal events that had the most sustained impact on African communities, such as the fall of France and Japan's conquest of South East Asia. They illustrate Africa's vital role in sustaining the Allied cause, especially after the fall of South East Asia. This attention to periodization allows for more comparative analyses both within and across regions and refines our analyses of changes in colonial policy. For example, Britain did not make the recruitment of African soldiers a priority until Japan's victories in the Far East, and then quickly moved to put 80,000 British West African troops in Burma.<sup>3</sup> France, on the other hand, relied heavily on West African soldiers in Europe and other parts of the empire, recruiting more than 100,000 men. These men on the frontlines were the most visible expression of Africa's role in the war; however, combat was just one dimension of Africa's contribution, for as the war expanded demands on African communities increased significantly. Nancy Lawler notes that Britain and France in particular "looked to their overseas territories to continue to fulfill their well-established role in the imperial systems . . . the colonies were expected not only to support themselves, but to provide resources, both natural and human, for the good of the respective metropolises."<sup>4</sup>

In many ways African resources sustained the Allied effort especially after 1942 but came at a high cost. What were the consequences for African communities as they supported their war-ravaged metropolises, the war effort, and themselves? Several contributors to this volume explore this question in depth by examining the social, cultural, political, and economic changes on the continent. One of the most critical areas of concern for colonial officials was labor. Not only did colonial powers use African soldiers to augment their forces in Europe and Asia, they needed African labor to maintain those economic sectors in Africa deemed essential to the war effort, such as coal mining and rubber production. In addition, entire communities had to be mobilized to provide rice and other foodstuffs for the troops, starch for

<sup>3</sup> For more on African troops in Burma, see John A. L. Hamilton, War Bush: 81 (West African) Division in Burma (Wilby, Norwich, UK: Michael Russell, 2001).

<sup>4</sup> Lawler, Soldiers, Airmen, Spies and Whisperers, 1.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
FrontmatterMore information

xx

Preface

uniforms, and palm products necessary for the manufacturing of soaps and margarine in Europe.

The mobilization of communities to provide labor, food, and other resources for the war exacerbated some of the contradictions of colonialism, thus making World War II an equally significant watershed in African history. Colonial regimes faced rising tensions as some communities experienced food shortages in the wake of the redeployment of agricultural labor or the redirection of food to troops. Price controls on food, as well as restrictions on shipping and the movement of imported goods such as kerosene, helped fuel hyperinflation, especially in urban centers. In a period when control was paramount, colonial officials had to devise new strategies and policies to secure the resources necessary for the war while keeping the lid on social and economic unrest.

Despite the hardships, many African men and women took to heart the stated aims of the Allied forces and volunteered to support the war in numerous ways in order to demonstrate their commitment to the shared ideals of the cause. They raised money for local and international charities, prayed for Allied victories, and financed airplanes. Nigerians, for example, contributed £210,999 to the war effort through the Nigeria War Relief Fund.<sup>5</sup> Regardless of where or how individuals and communities contributed, the war changed their lives. Many women shouldered new responsibilities and exercised new freedoms as men and a few women went off to fight. The pace of urbanization increased, leading to greater pressure on housing and other urban resources as well as an expanded social base for critiques of colonial rule. In addition, in Liberia, Senegal, and Nigeria the war brought many people into contact with black Americans and helped foster new ways of thinking and new cultural expressions.

In many areas the war exacerbated existing social tensions. Urbanization, for example, made it increasingly difficult for households and communities to maintain control over young people, especially young women. In the cities, which were exciting cauldrons of new cultures, political activism, and temptations, women and girls could evade the attempts of fathers and husbands to restrict their movement. Similarly, young men could evade the control that older men had over their ability to marry. New sexual mores, the anonymity of urban life, and the opportunities for wage earning challenged generational privileges, deprived communities of the labor of their youths, and deepened a range of health issues.

The war also intensified political consciousness and awareness of the contradictions of imperialism. The contradictions became more glaring as <sup>5</sup> Gloria Chuku, “‘Crack Kernels, Crack Hitler’: Export Production Drive and Igbo Women during the Second World War,” in Judith A. Byfield, LaRay Denzer, and Anthea Morrison (eds.), Gendering the African Diaspora: Women, Culture and Historical Change in the Caribbean and Nigerian Hinterland (Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 2010).

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
FrontmatterMore informationPreface

xxi

the war unfolded for not only did colonial subjects champion the self-determination and democracy of the people who ruled them, but Africa, specifically Brazzaville, became the capital of De Gaulle's Free France. These contradictions resonated especially strongly with African soldiers for whom the mystique of white superiority fell victim to the brutality they saw Europeans inflict upon each other. Moreover, they cringed under the racial discrimination within their own army command as well as that of prisoner of war camps. Racism also played out on the continent in different ways, and several contributors examine racism in policies and practice. These contributions on racism will be significant to the historiography of World War II for as John Dowers argues, "apart from the genocide of the Jews, racism remains one of the great neglected subjects of World War Two."<sup>6</sup>

People on the home front who saw their sacrifices during the war as a down payment for their own self-determination also came to realize the contradictions between the ideals of the war and the effort to re-legitimize colonialism. The continuation of wartime economic policies deepened the conditions for social discontent among workers, farmers, traders, and elites. World War II, in many instances, helped galvanize the militant nationalism of the postwar period as African men and women increasingly demanded their place in deciding their futures, their rights as workers, and an end to the indignities of racism. The war also contributed to the pace of decolonization, for the years of conflict left Britain and France economically weak. At its conclusion both colonial powers were initially committed to reforming imperialism through development and greater African political participation. However, their weakened economies and the cost of reforms ultimately contributed to their willingness to relinquish political control of their African colonies.<sup>7</sup>

Africa supplied troops, funds, and materials, as well as a location from which to plan for a Free France; thus it played a critical role in the Allied victory. The themes discussed here – mobilizing troops and resources, the experience of combat, changing gender roles, racial discrimination, democracy – all resonate with other world regions as well. Thus this volume will give scholars of North America, Europe, and Asia the tools to integrate Africa into their discussion of the war. They will have the resources to incorporate African voices and experiences from different parts of the continent, and to make comparative analyses within Africa and between Africa and other regions.

The insights and resources in this volume will enable us to teach World War II in its global complexity. For example, a global vantage point

<sup>6</sup> John Dower, War without Mercy: Race and Power in the Pacific War (New York: Pantheon Books, 1986), 4.

<sup>7</sup> Frederick Cooper, Decolonization and African Society: The Labor Question in French and British Africa (New York: Cambridge University Press, 1996).

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
FrontmatterMore information

xxii

Preface

complicates the seemingly simple issue of dating the start of the war. At the conclusion of the war in Europe, Italy and the United Nations signed a treaty in which all parties agreed that World War II in Ethiopia began with Italy's invasion of the country on October 3, 1935.<sup>8</sup> This detail forces us to problematize the dominant narrative of the war that begins and ends in Europe. In addition, this volume enables us to refine our understanding of the similarities and resonances of racial policies and practices among Allied and Axis forces. Britain, France, the United States, Germany, and Italy shared racial ideologies that demonized and infantilized people of African descent, and practiced racial discrimination at home and abroad. Therefore, both Allied and Axis states had to balance their need of black bodies for the war effort against their desire to maintain racial hierarchies and social separation. Finally, a global perspective reminds us that the discussions of what would come in the wake of the war had many contributing voices before competing power blocs reduced those voices to a bipolar Cold War. Ultimately, this volume will help to restore the "world" to the study of the Second World War.

A Note on Structure

This volume is organized into six sections. The first section offers three introductory essays that attempt to give a continent-wide overview of the centrality of Africa's human and material resources to the war effort. The remaining sections offer individual case studies from different parts of the continent. Section Two, Colonial Subjects and Imperial Armies, examines the experience of African men recruited for the military from French West Africa, South Africa, Morocco, and Kenya. Section Three, Mobilizing Communities and Resources for the War Effort, examines the largely coercive strategies imperial governments used to obtain resources such as rubber, lumber, minerals, or agricultural products from their African colonies and African resistance to them. Section Four, Race, Gender, and Social Change in a Time of War, draws on material from Eritrea, Gold Coast, Nigeria, South Africa, and France to illustrate how the war built on certain ideas about race and gender and changed gender relations as it created new opportunities, especially for young men and women. Section Five, Experiencing War in Africa and Europe, examines the wartime experiences of female combatants in Ethiopia, African American and African soldiers, French women, and missionaries. Finally, in Section Six, World War II and Anticolonialism, case studies from Guinea, Uganda, and Sudan consider the varied ways in which

<sup>8</sup> Richard Pankhurst, "Italian Fascist War Crimes in Ethiopia: A History of Their Discussion from the League of Nations to the United Nations (1936–1949)," Northeast African Studies, new series, 6 (1999), 109–11.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-05320-5 - Africa and World War II

Edited by Judith A. Byfield, Carolyn A. Brown, Timothy Parsons and Ahmad Alawad Sikainga
Frontmatter

More information

---

Preface

xxiii

the war shaped the anticolonial and nationalist movements that intensified after the war. Together they offer a macro and micro view of the multiple levels on which African contributions shaped the war as well as the ways in which the war affected individuals and communities and transformed Africa's political, economic, and social landscape.