

CONTENTS

List of Figures	vii
Introduction to the English Edition by Susan Daruwalla	xviii
Introduction	I
1 Buds of Chinese Modern Popular Fiction	20
2 The New Trend of Popular Tabloids in Shanghai between the End of the 19th Century and the Beginning of the 20th Century	70
3 The First Wave of Chinese Modern Literary Periodicals: From 1902 to 1907	96
4 1903: The Year the Late Qing Novels of Condemnation Commenced	132
5 After 1906: The Popularity of Novels of Sentiment and Novels of Grievance	184
6 The Second Wave of Modern Literary Periodicals in China: From 1909 to 1917	216
7 The Relationship between the Change of the Dynasty and the Thriving of Historical Romances	266
8 1916: The Introduction of Problem Stories and Soliciting Shanghai Inside Stories	304
9 1921: The Reorganization of Fiction Monthly and the Third Wave of the Publication of Popular Periodicals	334
10 A New Way toward the Humanization of Brothel Novels in the 1920s	374
11 Martial Arts Novelists in the Early Phase of the Republic of China in the 1920s	404
12 Social Novelists Who Left Their Mark on Urban Legends in the 1920s	450

13	Urban Locally Colored Novels: A Characteristic of Modern Popular Literature	504
14	The Craze for Films and Pictorials in the 1920s	526
15	The Establishment of Chinese-Style Detective Fiction in the 1920s	554
16	The Rapid Rise of Popular Literature in Northern China in the 1920s and 1930s	586
17	Martial Arts Novels in Northern China before and after the Defeat of the Japanese Invaders	618
18	Social Fiction Writers of Various Levels from the 1930s to the 1940s in Shanghai	660
19	The Popularity of the New Popular Fiction in the 1940s	704
20	History Lessons and Necessary Explorations of Historical Experience	742
	Collecting My Photographs: An Epilogue	754
	Appendix: Some Early Chinese Periodicals, Literary Works and Publishers	767
	Index	786