The Resources of the Past in Early Medieval Europe

This volume analyses the importance of history, the textual resources of the past and the integration of Christian and imperial Rome into the cultural memory of early medieval Europe within the wider question of identity formation. The case studies in this book shed new light on the process of codification and modification of cultural heritage in the light of the transmission of texts and the extant manuscript evidence from the early Middle Ages. The authors demonstrate how particular texts and their early medieval manuscript representatives in Italy, Francia, Saxony and Bavaria not only reflect ethnic, social and cultural identities but themselves contributed to the creation of identities, gave meaning to social practice and were often intended to inspire, guide, change or prevent action, directly or indirectly. These texts are shown to be part of a cultural effort to shape the present by restructuring the past.

Preface

This volume is the distillation of the collaborative work of all those involved in a three-year HERA JRP (Humanities in the European Research Area, part of the European Science Foundation's Joint Research Projects scheme) project on ‘Cultural memory and the resources of the past, 400–1000 AD’ in the Universities of Cambridge, Leeds, Utrecht and the Austrian Academy of Sciences in Vienna between 2010 and 2013. The project as a whole explored the eclectic uses of the resources of the past in the post-Roman successor states of western Europe in the early Middle Ages. It had two principal aims. Firstly we set out to determine the role played by the resources of the past in forming the identities of the communities of early medieval western Europe. Secondly we hoped to identify elements of the complex process by which the new discourses, ethnic identities and social models of early medieval Europe have come to form an essential part of modern European national and transnational identities.

In this volume we take up common themes that emerged in our work, namely, the importance of Rome, Roman history, the biblical past, and the integration of Christian and imperial Rome into the cultural memory of early medieval Europe within the wider concern of the problem of identity formation. This has included perceptions of difference on the part of specific social, political and religious communities. The case studies in this book combine two elements: firstly, there is the analysis of the transmission of texts and of the manuscript evidence. The extant manuscript material from the early middle ages has constituted a major resource to shed new light on the process of codification and modification of the cultural heritage, and for the study of cultural dynamics in general. Consequently we present a substantial amount of new and original manuscript material in this volume. Secondly, the papers consider how particular texts and their early medieval manuscript representatives in Italy, Francia, Saxony, and Bavaria do more than reflect ethnic, social and cultural identities. Each author suggests how the texts themselves contributed to the creation of identities, gave meaning to social practice, and were often intended, directly or indirectly, to inspire, guide, change, or prevent action. The chapters in this book demonstrate that the written texts that have been transmitted to us are therefore traces of social practice and of its changes, not only in a merely descriptive way, but also as part of a cultural effort to shape the present by means of restructuring the past.

It is a pleasure here to record our thanks to the European Science Foundation for coordinating the HERA Joint Research Projects, and the national research councils of Europe involved for their essential financial support to fund our ‘HERA project’ on ‘Cultural memory and the resources of the past, 400-1000 AD’. We should also like to thank our individual institutions (the Universities of Cambridge, Leeds, and Utrecht and the Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften) for their support. In particular we are grateful to Brigitte Burger in Utrecht, Laura Couzens in Cambridge, and Dagmar Giesriegl, Maximilian Diesenberger and Gerda Heydemann in Vienna, who all in their various ways assisted with many of the technical and administrative aspects of the HERA project. We wish too to acknowledge with gratitude the staff of the archives and libraries in Lucca, Milan, Monte Cassino, Munich, Oxford, Paris, St Gallen, Valenciennes, the Vatican, Venice, Vienna and Wolfenbüttel, as well as of the Institut de Recherche et d’Histoire des Textes in Paris, who made it possible for the contributors to study the manuscripts relevant to our work. We benefited greatly from the reactions of our audiences at workshops and conferences in Wassenaar, Cambridge, Vienna, and Leeds throughout the duration of the project, and particularly from the scholars of the various foreign academies and research institutes in Rome assembled at the British School at Rome in February 2013 for our final conference. Our particular thanks are due to Christopher Smith, the Director of the British School at Rome, for so kindly hosting this conference. In the preparation of the volume the editors are indebted to Susan Kelly for her invaluable and meticulous assistance at the preliminary stage of preparation of the text, to our anonymous reviewers for their candid observations and constructive suggestions, to the editorial and production staff at Cambridge University Press for their support and assistance, especially Liz Friend-Smith, Rosalyn Scott, Joanna Breeze and Anna Oxbury, and to André Bouwman, Chief Curator and Curator of Western Manuscripts, Leiden University Libraries, for kindly permitting us to reproduce fol. 9r from the ninth-century copy of the Liber pontificalis, now Leiden Universiteitsbibliotheek, Voss. Lat. Q 60, for the cover picture of this book.
