HUMAN RIGHTS IN EMERGENCIES

Public emergencies such as civil wars, natural disasters, and economic crises test the theoretical and practical commitments of international human rights law. During national crises, international law permits states to suspend many human rights protections in order to safeguard national security. States frequently overstep the limits of this authority, violating even peremptory human rights such as the prohibitions against torture and prolonged arbitrary detention. In this volume, leading scholars from law, philosophy, and political science grapple with challenging questions concerning the character, scope, and salience of international human rights, and they explain how the law seeks to protect human rights during emergencies. The contributors also evaluate the law's successes and failures and offer new proposals for strengthening respect for human rights.

Evan J. Criddle is Professor of Law at William and Mary Law School, where he specializes in public international law, international legal theory, human rights, fiduciary law, and administrative law.

The purpose of the ASIL Studies in International Legal Theory series is to clarify and improve the theoretical foundations of international law. Too often the progressive development and implementation of international law has foundered on confusion about first principles. This series raises the level of public and scholarly discussion about the structure and purposes of the world legal order and how best to achieve global justice through law.

This series grows out of the International Legal Theory project of the American Society of International Law. The ASIL Studies in International Legal Theory series deepens this conversation by publishing scholarly monographs and edited volumes of essays considering subjects in international legal theory.

Acknowledgments

On May 15, 2014, the American Society of International Law's (ASIL) International Legal Theory Interest Group invited leading international lawyers, political scientists, and philosophers to a symposium in Washington, D.C., to discuss how international human rights law deals with emergencies. With one exception, the chapters in this volume are the product of these conversations. I owe a special debt of thanks to Trey Childress, Evan Fox-Decent, and Tim Sellers for their enthusiastic support for this project from day one, and to the Wes Rist, Sheila Ward, and the staff of ASIL's Tillar House for their able assistance with the symposium. I also gratefully acknowledge the Canadian Social Science and Humanities Research Council and the College of William and Mary Marshall-Wythe School of Law for financial support that made this volume possible. Thanks also to John Berger, Kaylee Gum, Krishana Patel, and the editors at Cambridge University Press for their assistance in preparing this volume for publication. As in all things, I express my love and gratitude to Anika Criddle and our children, Isaac, Andrew, Elin, Claire, and Lucie, for their support, encouragement, and inspiration.
