Conflict and Commerce in Maritime East Asia

The Zheng family of merchants and militarists emerged from the tumultuous seventeenth century amid a severe economic depression, a harrowing dynastic transition from the ethnic Chinese Ming to the Manchu Qing, and the first wave of European expansion into East Asia. Under four generations of leaders over six decades, the Zheng had come to dominate trade across the China Seas. Their average annual earnings matched, and at times exceeded, those of their fiercest rivals: the Dutch East India Company. Although nominally loyal to the Ming in its doomed struggle against the Manchus, the Zheng eventually forged an autonomous territorial state located on Taiwan with the potential to encompass the family's entire economic sphere of influence. Through the story of the Zheng, Xing Hang provides a fresh perspective on the economic divergence of early modern China from Western Europe, its twenty-first-century resurgence, and the meaning of a Chinese identity outside China.

Xing Hang is Assistant Professor of History at Brandeis University. He is the author of the Encyclopedia of National Anthems (2011) and co-editor (with Tonio Andrade) of Sea Rovers, Silver, and Samurai: Maritime East Asia in Global History, 1550–1700.

Acknowledgments

The successful publication of this work owes, in large part, to the warm-hearted and generous assistance that I have received from numerous individuals along the way. My appreciation goes out to my fellow historians in late imperial Chinese, maritime East Asian, and global history. Among them, I must single out John E. “Jack” Wills, Jr., one of the towering pioneers of these fields. When reviewing my manuscript, he made his identity known and shared with me his unpublished work in progress, which was instrumental in shaping some of this project’s themes. On top of that, Jack continued to offer advice and support afterward, giving meticulous, handwritten comments to my drafts, suggesting additional sources to use, and even correcting grammar and usage. The other reviewers remain anonymous, but I am equally grateful for the time that they have spent and their valuable feedback. Tonio Andrade read several renditions of my proposal and offered candid critiques both in writing and during extended phone and Skype conversations. Nie Dening of Xiamen University used all of his available resources and contacts to help me locate and scan a rare image from a book already out of print. I also give special thanks to the libraries and archives in mainland China, Taiwan, and the United States for opening their doors and making available their collections for me to peruse and analyze.

My graduate advisors at Berkeley, Yeh Wen-hsin, Kenneth Pomeranz, Jan de Vries, and the late Frederic Wakeman, helped shape and develop my project at its initial stages, and continue to inspire me as role models with their enlightening scholarship and sharp insight. I am deeply thankful to my colleagues at Brandeis, my new home after Berkeley, for providing such a warm and accommodating environment where my work could continue to mature. In particular, my former chair, Jane Kamensky, was always available as a resource, answering my questions at lightning speed over email, reading over my chapters, and giving me encouraging pep talks in her office. The students at Brandeis never cease to amaze me with their enthusiasm, broad interests, and thirst for knowledge. In discussion sections and seminars, many of them offered highly original perspectives pertinent to my project, and often from a unique angle outside of the history discipline. I probably learned much more from teaching them than they will ever learn from me.

I want to express my gratitude to my editor, Lucy Rhymer, and Cambridge University Press for their enthusiastic support for my project and for working with me to bring the manuscript to fruition. Last, but not least, I am deeply indebted to my family. My parents pushed me hard and encouraged me to challenge all boundaries. My in-laws read over my work and offered critiques from the perspective of educated outsiders with no prior knowledge of my topic. My wife, Kwun Suen, provided all kinds of support, and shared with me the emotional ups and downs of the manuscript process. Finally, Baby Sheng is my shining little beacon who gives me hope during times of frustration, when he does not add to it!
