COLLABORATIVE CAPITALISM IN AMERICAN CITIES

Reforming Urban Market Regulations

In many American cities, the urban cores still suffer. Poverty and unemployment remain endemic, despite policy initiatives aimed at systemic solutions. Rashmi Dyal-Chand’s research has focused on how businesses in some urban cores are succeeding despite the challenges. Using three examples of urban collaborative capitalism, this book extrapolates a set of lessons about sharing. It argues that sharing can fuel business development and growth. Sharing among businesses can be critical for their economic survival. Sharing can also produce a particularly stable form of economic growth by giving economic stability to employees. As the examples in this book show, sharing can allow American businesses to remain competitive while returning more wealth to their workers, and this more collaborative approach can help solve the problems of urban underdevelopment and poverty.

Rashmi Dyal-Chand is Professor of Law in the School of Law at Northeastern University.
Collaborative Capitalism in American Cities

REFORMING URBAN MARKET REGULATIONS

RASHMI DYAL-CHAND
Northeastern University School of Law
For Ben, James, and Kieran
Contents

Acknowledgments

1 Introduction

PART I  COLLABORATIVE CAPITALISM DEFINED

2 Home Care in the Bronx and Philadelphia

3 Capitalist Sharing and Economic Stability

PART II  COLLABORATIVE CAPITALISM EXPLORED

4 Rehabilitating South Shore

5 Regulating against Sharing

6 More Than a Day’s Work in Austin

7 Understanding Collaborative Capitalism

PART III  COLLABORATIVE CAPITALISM REINVIGORATED

8 Collaborative Capitalism Refined: The “Sharing Economy”

9 Regulating for Sharing

10 Reforming Laws to Support Collaborative Capitalism

Appendix

Index
Acknowledgments

This book is a product of the rich conversations I had with the people who participated in the three networks I researched. They shared their time, knowledge, candor, and reflections with me about the work to which they have dedicated so much of their effort and passion. They invited me into their homes and offices, and gave me a window into their lives and work. Many of them took the time to follow up our formal interviews with informal conversations and reflections. They answered my additional, and sometimes repeated, queries with documents and references. I am deeply grateful to them.

Colleagues in the legal academy and well beyond it provided essential comments and suggestions at every stage of my research design, analysis, and writing. Libby Adler, Debbie Becher, Peter Enrich, Ron Grzywinski, Mary Houghton, Karen Kulp, John Lovett, Daniel Medwed, Jeremy Paul, Peggy Powell, and Rick Surpin read substantial portions of my manuscript, and I benefited so very much from their input and encouragement. Colleagues at the Progressive Property Conference, Northeastern University School of Law, and Loyola University New Orleans College of Law also read portions of the manuscript and gave valuable comments. For their wisdom, guidance, and astute feedback, I thank Michelle Wilde Anderson, Bernadette Atuahene, Jane Baron, John Bliss, Scott Cummings, Hanoch Dagan, David Dana, Dan Danielsen, John Infranca, Nestor Davidson, Stacey Dogan, Amy Ferrell, Julian Fray, Adam Friedman, Priya Gupta, Shelly Kreiczer-Levy, Jack McDevitt, Audrey McFarlane, Kristin Madison, Andrea Matwyshyn, Thomas Mitchell, Tim Mulvaney, David Phillips, Mark Rosen, Rachel Rosenbloom, Jessica Silbey, Ezra Rosser, Jim Rowan, Chris Serkin, Joseph William Singer, Jim Smith, Emily Spieler, Laura Underkuffer, and Margaret Woo.

I had the great benefit of spending part of my 2016 summer at the American Bar Foundation. For facilitating my visit there and for invaluable suggestions on my research design, I thank Ajay Mehrotra, Jothie Rajah, Stephen Daniels, Terry Halliday, Laura Beth Nielsen, Susan Shapiro, and Carole Silver.
I received essential financial support for the research underlying this book from the US Department of Commerce, Economic Development Administration (EDA), and also from Northeastern University. In addition to guiding me in the process of applying for the EDA grant, Steven Winter of the Metropolitan Area Planning Council shared with me his deep wisdom about local economic development.

This book would have taken me twice the time to write had it not been for the support of my dean, Jeremy Paul, and associate dean, Dan Danielsen. They provided extra funding, time, space, and encouragement at every step of the way.

My research assistants were intrepid in their support. Not only did they do essential research for the manuscript, but they also were sources of inspiration, humor, and wisdom. I thank Christopher Anderson, Anna Maria Annino, Seth Barron, Stephanie Knight, Daniel D’Lugoff, Russell Paul, Joel Quick, and Selena Poznak. Kimberly Elkin served as a postgraduate fellow, literally educating me on the entire “varieties of capitalism” canon. Keith Wise wielded his considerable technical and administrative skills to provide me with years of excellent administrative support. Finally, the librarians at Northeastern Law School continue to be a critical part of each of my research successes. I particularly thank Elliott Hibbler and Sharon Persons.

Notwithstanding these numerous and essential sources of support, the opinions, findings, and recommendations I make in this book are my own, and they do not necessarily reflect the views of these individuals and organizations.

My editor at Cambridge University Press, John Berger, has been my coach in this journey. I have benefited greatly from his involvement, from his initial interest in the project to his ongoing encouragement at each step of the writing and editing process.

My parents, Alda and Anand Dyal-Chand, in addition to giving me an education that taught me the value of writing, provided thoughtful editorial advice.

Finally, I thank my husband and sons. My husband, Benjamin Ericson, cheerfully took on extra household and family burdens – for years – as I worked on this project. He listened to me, reacted to half-baked ideas, and read drafts that I was not yet ready to share with anyone else. Not a day has gone by during this project without his encouragement, active love, and support. And my sons, James and Kieran, each in his own special ways, have inspired me, given me space and time to work, and kept me grounded in life. You have my deepest gratitude.