

PUBLIC PAINTING AND VISUAL CULTURE IN EARLY REPUBLICAN FLORENCE

Street corners, guild halls, government offices, and confraternity centers contained paintings that made the city of Florence a visual jewel at precisely the time of its emergence as an international cultural leader. This book considers the paintings that were made specifically for consideration by lay viewers as well as the way they could have been interpreted by audiences who approached them with specific perspectives. Their belief in the power of images, their understanding of the persuasiveness of pictures, and their acceptance of the utterly vital role that art could play as a propagator of civic, corporate, and individual identity made lay viewers keenly aware of the paintings in their midst. Those pictures affirmed the piety of the people for whom they were made in an age of social and political upheaval as the city experimented with an imperfect form of republicanism that often failed to adhere to its declared aspirations.

George R. Bent is the Sydney Gause Childress Professor of the Arts at Washington and Lee University, where he has taught in the Department of Art and Art History since 1993. A Fulbright scholar, Bent has written about the art of Lorenzo Monaco, Florentine painting of the Late Middle Ages and Early Renaissance, and manuscript production in the fourteenth century.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

My interest in the art of the fourteenth and early fifteenth centuries was born in Oberlin, Ohio, nurtured in Palo Alto, California, and cultivated in Florence, Italy, during the longue durée of the Reagan administration. In those days, and then through the 1990s, I came to think that the artistic traditions that drove Tuscan painting had much more to do with the mentality of the Middle Ages than it did with the early modern period. That belief led to and resulted in my examination of the artistic environment in the Camaldolese monastery of Santa Maria degli Angeli and the legacy of Lorenzo Monaco, its most famous member. When that work reached its logical conclusion, I felt compelled to turn away from the strictly controlled environment of the cloister and to think instead about the messier, more complicated, and only vaguely understood visual culture of the Florentine laity. Poor, undereducated, and largely disenfranchised, these usually overlooked viewers presented an enormous challenge for me: I had to teach myself a great deal about corners of society I'd only paid marginal attention to in my earlier work, and I frequently reached out to friends and colleagues for advice and guidance. The going was slow at times, but it was always richly rewarding.

Fortunately, the friends and colleagues to whom I turned were more than just enormously helpful. Without them, this project could have never reached its conclusion. Judith Steinhoff, David Peterson, Areli Marina, Barbara Deimling, Alick McLean, and Felicity Ratté engaged me critically at the early stages of my research and helped me identify the good, address the bad, and beautify the ugly throughout the process. Roger Crum and Perri Lee Roberts called upon their vast understanding of the early Quattrocento to lead me in worthy directions. Philip Earenfight, Megan Holmes, Kay Arthur, and William Levin were generous with their time and unreasonably patient with me when I asked them basic questions. Larry Kanter, Hayden Maginnis, Shelley Zuraw, John Najemy, and Marvin Trachtenberg provided encouragement during encounters that they surely won't remember as well as I do. Alessio Assonitis tenaciously advocated on my behalf on an utterly crucial matter and at an utterly crucial moment. Andrea Di Lorenzo was gracious with his time and his guidance. And Gail Solberg repeatedly aided me in this endeavor with her thoughtful commentary, her tremendous intellect, multiple shots of espresso, and her affable unwillingness to accept anything less than sound argumentation.

Anastasia Graf, Beatrice Rehl, and the staff at Cambridge University Press showed great faith in this project and patiently helped guide it through to completion. The staffs at the Florentine State Archives, Biblioteca Nazionale Centrale, Kunsthistorisches Library, the Società Dantesca, and the Polo Musei were courteous, efficient, and enormously helpful at every turn. I was assisted greatly by the generosity of the staffs at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C. and the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. Erica Garber at Art Resource tracked down photographs for me that I feared were hopelessly lost forever and advocated for me when others were difficult to obtain. Marcia Hall kindly lent the two diagrams of Santa Croce's tramezzo now accepted as the most accurate representations of that lost architectural form. The two anonymous readers solicited by Cambridge who pointed out embarrassing errors in the original manuscript made the final product infinitely better than it otherwise would have been. The Millard Meiss fund administered by College Art Association defrayed the cost of production in vital ways. And Lorri Olan and Cathryn Harbor read portions of the text and helped me rewrite them with an eye toward communicating my ideas clearly to actual human beings – a marvelous concept indeed.

A variety of colleagues, students, and friends at Washington and Lee University have directly and indirectly influenced the contents of this book. The late Pamela Simpson was a mentor and role model for me in more ways than probably even I realize: I miss her greatly. Kathleen Olson-Janjic took over for me as department chair at just the right moment, and that selfless act enabled me to focus on matters at hand and finish this project in a timely manner. Melissa Kerin, Elliott King, Andrea Lepage, and the late Joan O'Mara heard the arguments contained within the following pages and improved them through their observant and prescient suggestions. Hank Dobin, Suzanne Keen, Tom Williams, Harlan Beckley, June Aprile, Robert Strong, Marc Conner, and Daniel Wubah supported and funded this project from beginning to end. Martine Petite's generosity humbled me greatly, and without the support of Mary Hodapp and Betty Hickox, this study would not have been possible. And the hundreds (thousands?) of students – some of whom have been hooded with PhDs in the intervening years – who have listened, spoken, and even helped research some of the topics in this book contributed to my thinking in vital ways.

Long before I began this project, I was fortunate to have studied with masterful and deeply influential teacher-scholars. Robert Neil, Marcia Colish, Suzanne Lewis, Alessandro Nova, Judith Brown, Andrew Ladis, Marvin Eisenberg, and William Hood mentored me in my youth and nudged me forward at those crucial moments when I did not have the confidence to do so on my own: anything at all that is good in this book can be traced back to them.

With my adopted siblings in Italy – Carlo Zappia, Patrizia Lattarulo, Stefano Sacchetti, and Anna Lami – I have shared a quarter-century’s worth of joyous memories and a deep, abiding love and affection: their insights have influenced me more than they can ever know. I send to Ruth Bent and to the late George R. Bent II, whom I miss dearly, heartfelt thanks for close to six decades of love and support. To William, Catalena, and Miles Bent I repeat what I have said to them from the day each was born: no father has ever been prouder of his children than I am of mine. And to Lorri Olan, who bridges my past and my future, I dedicate this book by way of thanks for joining me on this grand adventure of ours.
