

DRAMATURGY AND DRAMATIC CHARACTER

Dramatic character is among the most long-standing and familiar of artistic phenomena. From the theatre of Dionysus in ancient Greece to the modern stage, William Storm's book delivers a wide-ranging view of how characters have been conceived at pivotal moments in history. Storm reaffirms dramatic character as not only ancestrally prominent but as a continuing focus of interest. He looks closely at how stage figures compare to fictional characters in books, dramatic media, and other visual arts. Emphasis is sustained throughout on fundamental questions of how theatrical characterization relates to dramatic structure, style, and genre. Extensive attention is given to how characters think and to aspects of agency, selfhood, and consciousness. As the only book to offer a long view of theatrical characterization across this historical span, Storm's dramaturgical and theoretical investigation examines topics that remain vital and pertinent for practitioners, scholars, students of theatre and literature, and general audiences.

WILLIAM STORM is a Professor in the Department of Theatre Arts at New Mexico State University, where he teaches dramatic literature, theory, and theatre history. He is the author of After Dionysus: A Theory of the Tragic and Irony and the Modern Theatre as well as plays and essays in literary criticism and dramatic theory. He was literary manager of the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles and was production dramaturg for many plays in workshop development and full production.

Acknowledgments

I honor the legacy of Bert O. States and his extensive writings on character in drama. I am grateful to James Phelan and colleagues at Ohio State University for hosting the “Symposium on Narrative, Science, and Performance” and publishing the collected papers from that conference. Parts of Chapter 4 appeared originally in Narrative 19:2 (May 2011): 242–252, with the title, “On the Science of Dramatic Character,” and I am grateful to Ohio State University Press for permission to reprint. Many thanks to Steve Pinker for the discussion of consciousness, especially regarding David Chalmers’s “hard problem,” and to Rebecca Goldstein for email conversations on Plato, including the relation of dramatically presented character and real persons. My thanks also to Richard Powers for the correspondence on dramatic and narrative character and focalization in relation to The Echo Maker, and to Mark Rose for his commentary on Chapter 2 in relation to Hamlet. I am deeply appreciative of the opportunity to teach two new courses, “How Characters Think” and “Dramatic Character,” in my home department at New Mexico State University Theatre Arts, and of the students who brought so much to our class discussions. I benefit once again from the exemplary editorial care at Cambridge, and am profoundly grateful to the editors there: Kate Brett, Fleur Jones, Clare Dennison, and especially Victoria L. Cooper who invited me to write my own book on dramaturgy and character.
