Religion is relevant to all of us, whether we are believers or not. This book concerns two interrelated topics. First, how probable is God’s existence? Should we not conclude that all divinities are human inventions? Second, what are the mental and social functions of endorsing religious beliefs? The answers to these questions are interdependent. If a religious belief were true, the fact that humans hold it might be explained by describing how its truth was discovered. If all religious beliefs are false, a different explanation is required.

In this provocative book Herman Philipse combines philosophical investigations concerning the truth of religious convictions with empirical research on the origins and functions of religious beliefs. Numerous topics are discussed, such as the historical genesis of monotheisms out of polytheisms, how to explain Saul’s conversion to Jesus, and whether any apologetic strategy of Christian philosophers is convincing. Universal atheism is the final conclusion.

Herman Philipse is Distinguished Professor Emeritus at the University of Utrecht, the Netherlands. He is the author of God in the Age of Science? A Critique of Religious Reason and of numerous publications on many philosophical topics.

This is a series of interdisciplinary texts devoted to major-level courses in religion, philosophy, and related fields. It includes original, current, and wide-spanning contributions by leading scholars from various disciplines that (a) focus on the central academic topics in religion and philosophy, (b) are seminal and up-to-date regarding recent developments in scholarship on the various key topics, and (c) incorporate, with needed precision and depth, the major differing perspectives and backgrounds – the central voices on the major religions and the religious, philosophical, and sociological viewpoints that cover the intellectual landscape today. Cambridge Studies in Religion, Philosophy, and Society is a direct response to this recent and widespread interest and need.

It was an honour to be invited by Paul Moser and Chad Meister, the volume editors of Cambridge Studies in Religion, Philosophy, and Society, to contribute a volume to this series. The invitation has been challenging as well, since in my earlier book on the philosophy of religion, God in the Age of Science? A Critique of Religious Reason (2012), I evaluated extensively (and critically) the many arguments in support of theism provided by excellent analytic philosophers of religion such as Richard Swinburne. Would I be able to write something really and radically new compared to my earlier endeavours? This is what I have tried to do in the following pages, at least to a large extent. I am most grateful to Chad and Paul for inviting me, and it has been a great pleasure to produce this book.

Since Dutch is my native language and I have been a university professor of philosophy in the Netherlands during over thirty-five years, my English often needs to be corrected. I am deeply indebted to my dear Oxford colleague and friend Peter M. S. Hacker, who not only commented critically on my arguments but also corrected numerous linguistic blunders.

Many other friends and colleagues have enriched my insights with regard to the many topics discussed in this book by commenting on some sections or on interrelated articles. Let me express my gratitude to Peter Barthel, Maarten Boudry, Gijsbert van den Brink, Frank van Caspel, John Cottingham, Willem Drees, Daan Dronkers, Hein Duijf, Louw Feenstra, Job de Grefte, Julia Hermann, Jeroen Hopster, Wouter Kalf, Michael Klenk, Eddie van de Kraats, Niels van Miltenburg, Paul Moser, Fred

Muller, Graham Oppy, Rik Peels, Emanuel Rutten, Richard Swinburne, and Franciscus Verbunt. My part-time assistant Nick Boerma traced tirelessly many articles published on topics discussed in this book, and checked the references.

After I had held a chair of philosophy at Leiden University since 1985, Utrecht University appointed me as a distinguished professor of philosophy in 2003. I am deeply grateful to the university board for this appointment, which gave me a lot of time for research. My greatest debts are to my spouse, Anthonya Visser, for abundant love and support. The book is dedicated to her.
