

Contents

|  |                 |
|--|-----------------|
| Preface   | page vii |
| Archives  | viii            |
| List of Abbreviations                                       | ix              |
| Introduction: Exile and Interpretation                             | I               |
| 1 Hans Baron: Humanism and Republican Liberty in an Age of Tyranny | 20              |
| Introduction   | 20              |
| Crisis   | 24              |
| Hedgehogs and Foxes: Baron and the Early Italian Renaissance       | 27              |
| Life and Study in Weimar Germany                                   | 32              |
| The Discovery of Civic Humanism                                    | 45              |
| Exile  | 54              |
| The Making of The Crisis                                    | 62              |
| Epilogue   | 67              |
| 2 Karl Popper: “Critical Interpretation” as Fighting Fascism       | 71              |
| Introduction   | 71              |
| Fighting Fascism and the Power of Ideas                            | 72              |
| Ambivalence and Assimilation                                       | 75              |
| Being a Jew and Being of Jewish Origin                             | 80              |
| “Arguing from the Concentration Camp”                              | 83              |
| Critical Rationalism and Critical Interpretation                   | 90              |
| Popper’s Fascist Plato and Its Reception                           | 101             |
| That “dangerous clown,” and Marx                                   | 110             |
| Ideology and Anachronism   | 116             |

|   |   |     |
|---|---|-----|
|   | Popper, Berlin, and Their Common Enemies                            | 118 |
|   | Epilogue  | 127 |
| 3 | Leo Strauss as “Talmud in the Wrong Place”                          | 131 |
|   | Introduction  | 131 |
|   | The Cave of Historicism   | 134 |
|   | Franz Rosenzweig  | 143 |
|   | “Natural Understanding”   | 146 |
|   | Reading “Exactly”   | 152 |
|   | Interpreting Hobbes in the 1930s                                    | 155 |
|   | The Poison Pill of Hobbes   | 168 |
|   | Atheism with a “Good Conscience”                                    | 172 |
|   | “Platonic” Liberalism   | 176 |
|   | Philosophical History and Exegetical Magic                          | 182 |
|   | Reading “Exactly,” Textual Autonomy, and the Crisis ofModernity | 185 |
|   | Epilogue  | 190 |
| 4 | Erich Auerbach and the Crisis of German Philology                   | 193 |
|   | Introduction  | 193 |
|   | Knowing the Enemy   | 195 |
|   | Philology and History   | 204 |
|   | Philology and Ideology  | 210 |
|   | From Weimar to Yale   | 212 |
|   | The Elimination of the Old Testament                                | 220 |
|   | It’s Personal   | 234 |
|   | Epiphany in Istanbul  | 238 |
|   | Philology, Teleology, and Historicist Humanism                      | 243 |
|   | Mimesis : Form and Content                                   | 247 |
|   | Mimesis : Method and Approach                                | 254 |
|   | Epilogue  | 258 |
|   | Conclusion  | 265 |
|   | Bibliography   | 273 |
|   | Index  | 296 |