In this book, Robin Gill argues that moral passion and rational ethical deliberation are not enemies; moral passion often lurks behind many apparently rational ethical commitments; and though it is a key component of truly selfless moral action, without rational ethical deliberation it can also be extremely dangerous. Gill maintains that a reanalysis of moral passion is overdue. He inspects the gap between the ‘purely rational’ accounts of ethics provided by some moral philosophers and the normative positions that they espouse and/or the moral actions that they pursue. He also contends that Christian ethicists have not been adept at identifying their own implicit moral passion or at explaining why it is that doctrinal positions generate passionately held moral conclusions. Using a range of disciplines, including cognitive science and moral psychology, alongside the more usual disciplines of moral philosophy and religious ethics, Gill also makes links with moral passion in other world faith traditions.

Christian ethics has increasingly assumed a central place within academic theology. At the same time, the growing power and ambiguity of modern science and the rising dissatisfaction within the social sciences about claims to value neutrality have prompted renewed interest in ethics within the secular academic world. There is, therefore, a need for studies in Christian ethics which, as well as being concerned with the relevance of Christian ethics to the present-day secular debate, are well informed about parallel discussions in recent philosophy, science, or social science. New Studies in Christian Ethics aims to provide books that do this at the highest intellectual level and demonstrate that Christian ethics can make a distinctive contribution to this debate – either in moral substance or in terms of underlying moral justifications.

Titles published in the series

1. Rights and Christian Ethics, Kieran Cronin
2. Biblical Interpretation and Christian Ethics, Ian McDonald
3. Power and Christian Ethics, James Mackey
4. Plurality and Christian Ethics, Ian S. Markham
7. Justice and Christian Ethics, E. Clinton Gardner
8. Feminism and Christian Ethics, Susan Parsons
9. Sex, Gender and Christian Ethics, Lisa Sowle Cahill
12. Priorities and Christian Ethics, Garth Hallett

(continued after the index)
MORAL PASSION AND CHRISTIAN ETHICS

ROBIN GILL

University of Kent
Contents

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Acknowledgements</th>
<th>page ix</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Introduction</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 Moral Passion in New Studies in Christian Ethics</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2 Is Moral Passion germane Just to Theologians?</td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3 Christian Public Ethics</td>
<td>75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 Faith as an Option</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5 Moral Outrage</td>
<td>124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6 Collective Moral Passion within Faith Traditions</td>
<td>152</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7 Moral Passion as Enemy-Love</td>
<td>182</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A Final Word</td>
<td>206</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Select Bibliography in Christian Ethics
Index

© in this web service Cambridge University Press
www.cambridge.org
Acknowledgements

I had thought that, on retiring from teaching and taking on instead the role of editing a journal, I would not submit myself again to the rigours of writing another monograph for Cambridge University Press. However, moral passion got the better of me. More specifically, as editor of Theology I found that I was bombarded with new books and, for once, had the time to read them all. They raised important new questions across many, sometimes novel, disciplines that were simply impossible to resist. I am most grateful for that stimulus, for being able to test out some of my ideas on the readers of Theology (in particular, parts of Chapters 2–4) and especially to Philip Law at Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge with his immense knowledge of theologians across the world.

Another vital stimulus has been fellow academics and members of numerous academic conferences – too many to recall – for challenging and refining some of my ideas. Robin Lovin, Stephen Clark, David Martin and Christopher Hallpike read a previous draft of this book and suggested crucial improvements. Jonathan Montgomery, John Court and Richard Norman also refined particular parts with their very considerable and diverse areas of expertise, and Susan Wessel generously allowed me to see an advance copy of her fine study, Passion and Compassion in Early Christianity (Cambridge University Press, 2016). Beatrice Rehl, Laura Morris and the other excellent staff at Cambridge University Press, going right back to 1989, have once again given me splendid support. And I am particularly grateful to Jeremy Carrette, my colleague at the University of Kent, for his careful advice on how Christian theologians might engage (as I believe we must today) in nuanced inter-religious theological dialogue.

Finally, my love and gratitude to my family: to Jenny for enduring my theological ramblings over half a century, and to Martin for lobbing penetrating questions about my various theological projects. Academics do tend to be obsessives. We especially need our families to keep at least the odd toe on the ground.