P R E F A C E

SOME of these essays have already appeared—in The Quest, The London Mercury, The British Review, The London Quarterly Review—and I desire here to make the usual acknowledgments. About half of them are now printed for the first time.

The title is deliberately chosen: for many of my opinions I do not expect acceptance, but it will be enough if they provoke thought and stimulate discussion.

I should like to tender special thanks to the officials of the Cambridge University Press for the minute care they have expended on a work which offers many chances of error in detail.
