

British Christians and the Third Reich

In this groundbreaking study, Andrew Chandler examines the complex relationship between religion and politics, church and state, and national and international politics during the period that witnessed the rise and fall of the Third Reich. Across these turbulent years a number of British Christians confronted and repeatedly challenged the Nazi regime. Chandler shows how many of the key moral questions which came to define the modern world now crystallised: What view should the Christian take of the political state? How should the claims of dictators and democrats be judged? How should the church protest against injustice - and what could actually be done about it? How should peace be preserved and when should war be declared? How should a just war be justly fought? It is a history which places the Third Reich firmly in an international perspective, revealing the moral arguments and debates that Nazism provoked across the democracies. It is also an important study of the many ways in which men and women outside Germany intervened, protested, and campaigned against the Hitler regime and sought to support its critics and its victims.

Andrew Chandler is Professor of Modern History at the University of Chichester. He has published widely in the area of twentieth-century religious and political history, often focusing on the British churches and international affairs. His most recent book is George Bell, Bishop of Chichester: Church, State and Resistance in the Age of Dictatorship (Eerdmans, 2016). He is a fellow of the Royal Historical Society.

This book has been long in the writing and I have accumulated many debts, not least to my patient editor at Cambridge University Press, Beatrice Rehl, and to the wisdom of the readers invited by the press to judge the text. Much is owed to librarians and archivists: Rachel Cosgrave and the staff of Lambeth Palace Library; Fr Nicholas Schofield and the staff of Westminster Diocesan Archives; the staff at the library of the Society of Friends at Friends House in London; Gerhard Keiper and his colleagues at the Auswärtiges Amt archive in Berlin; Henner Grundhoff and his colleagues at the Evangelisches Zentralarchiv in Berlin; Michael Gale at the library of the Queen's Foundation for Ecumenical Education in Birmingham and Betty Hagglund at Woodbrooke Library; and Janet Carter and the staff at the library of the University of Chichester. In many ways it was my teacher at the University of Birmingham, J.A.S. Grenville, who set my feet on this path and encouraged me to make my way. I have never failed to sense his wisdom and kindness in all that I have attempted. I remain most grateful to Professor David M. Thompson, who supervised my doctoral thesis may years ago and who has remained an important presence in my life. I am sharply conscious of how many of those who have helped me over the years are no longer alive: Melanie Barber, archivist of the Bell Papers at Lambeth Palace Library and altogether a stout advocate of Bell; Professor John Conway at the University of British Columbia, who helped a young historian in precarious, postdoctoral years and who remained a wise and generous friend; Professor Owen Chadwick, whose work at large has proved a great and continuing influence; Professor W. Reg. Ward, from whom I learnt so much altogether; Richard Gutteridge, with whom I spent many hours in Cambridge; Elsie Duncan-Jones and Eberhard George Wedell. I am glad to look about me still and find Alan Wilkinson, Anglican priest and fine scholar of twentieth-century British Christianity; Keith Clements, whose historical and ecumenical contribution has been so significant; that great Quaker of Birmingham, Eric Adams; Professor Gerhard Ringshausen, who has worked with me for many years on George Bell; and Ferdinand Schlingensiepen, the great authority on Dietrich Bonhoeffer. In being so fortunate in such company it should be clear that any faults in this book will turn out to be wholly my own. I am, as ever, deeply grateful to my family and most of all to my mother and father, Janet and Eric Chandler.
