INDEX

N.B. The following points should be observed by anyone consulting this index:

The Gospels are all ranged together under the head “Gospels”; and the Gospel according to the Hebrews also is set down under this heading.

The Epistles of the New Testament are set down in the customary order, under the heading “Epistles.”

Under the heading “Councils of the Church” all the Councils mentioned in these volumes will be found.

Under the headings “Buddhist treatises,” “Chinese literature,” “Hindu sacred books,” and “Zoroastrian sacred books” all the separate treatises mentioned in these volumes and belonging to each of these classes respectively will be found.

Chinese monarchs will be found under the heading “Chinese monarchs and dynasties.”

Aaron, I. 241, 244
Abbasid dynasty (caliphs), II. 292, 289, 291
Abderrahman III (Moslem ruler of Spain), II. 250
Abdinegro, I. 403
Abelard, n. 347, 348
Abijah (king of Judah), I. 294, 338
Abner, I. 262
Abraham, came from Babylonia, the first true monotheist, I. 34; his life reaches us through oral tradition, 224; must have had a clan of at least a thousand persons, 225; his twofold ideal, earthly and heavenly, is the sole explanation of the history of Israel, 225, 226, 224; his circumcision a symbol of self-sacrifice, 226; his relationship to other races, 227; his sacrifice, not completed, of his son, an indication of a great though imperfectly seen truth, 227, 228, 229; a great and ruling spirit, 228; his ideals accepted by Jacob and other leaders of the race after him, 231, 233; had more originality than Moses, though the visible work accomplished by him was not so great, 235, 236 (see also 295, 296, 298 and II. 59, 107); accounted a sacred character by Mohammed, II. 275. (See also II. 108, 162, 263, 265)
Absalom, I. 260, 261, 262
Abdulate, the, I. 45, 46, 61
Abū Bakr (caliph), II. 269, 271, 281
Abul Hasan (Arabian geographer), II. 287
Abū Talib (uncle and guardian of Mohammed), II. 265, 269, 270
Abyssinian king, II. 269
Acharna, I. 142, 143
Achemenian dynasty, I. 102, 107, 110
Ashish (Philistine king), I. 256, 257, 258
Acre, II. 323, 324
Acta Consiliorum, I. xii, II. 215, 302
Adam, I. 257, II. 339, 359
Adam, James (author of The Religious Teachers of Greece), I. 151
Adonis, I. 245, 248
Æneas, I. 191
Åolian race, I. 144, 145
Æons, A. Gnostic conception, drawn by imaginative reasoning from the New Testament, II. 187, 189
Æschylus (poet), I. 138, 161, 162, 163, 188, 200
Aegius (Roman general), II. 238
Aghan, II. 238
Agamemnon, I. 144, 145, 161, 228
Agincourt, battle of, II. 340
Agni (Hindu deity), I. 38, 69
Agra, II. 328
Ahaz (king of Judah), I. 291–294, 297
Ahura Mazda or Angra Mainyu, I. 105
Ahriman or Angra Mainyu, I. 105
Ahrura Mazda or Auramazdia, the Supreme Being in the ancient Persian (Zoroastrian) creed, I. 78; worshipped by the modern Persis, 78; poetically represented as conversing with Asha (his Righteousness), 81; chooses Zara-thustra as his messenger, 81; but is everywhere found in the Avesta, see the quotations on pages 81, 83, 84, 85, 87, 88, 93, 96, 105; receives unique worship from the great conqueror Darius, 98, 99; appears as Aåharxand in the Pahlavi writings (medieval Persian) where he is equally the single Supreme Being, 106, 109; mentioned in connexion with other religions, n. 58.
INDEX

474

Akkad (the same as Sumeria), n. 112, 113

Akkad (emperor of India), n. 332

Akkad (female disciple of Buddha), n. 332

Albright (archbishop of Mayence and of Magdeburg), n. 399, 390

Albertus Magnus, mediaeval philosopher, n. 348, 349, 355

Albigenses or Cathari (heretical precursors of the Reformation), persecuted, 337, 364, 365; the moral errors with which they are charged are not rightly imputed to them, 365-367; amid their doctrinal errors, a real truth shines out, 368, 369, 371

Albírúní, Arabian mathematician, n. 288

Alcuin (learned man under Charlemagne), n. 305

Alexander (archbishop of Alexandria), n. 210-212, 221, 222, 225

Alexander (archbishop of Constantinople), n. 235

Alexander of Macedon, n. 75, 76, 97, 107, 158, 159, 263, 364, 366, 383, 397, 400, n. 237

Alexander V (pope), n. 375

Alexander VI (pope), n. 396

Alexander the Great, n. 288, 300, 303, 347

Albæus (Arabian optician), n. 288

Ali (caliph, and son-in-law of Mohammed), n. 269, 271, 279, 281

Al-Kunduri, the dignity of his death noticed, n. 332

Al-Mamun (caliph), a promoter of civilization, n. 252

Almañor (Moslem ruler of Spain), n. 282

Alois (sultan of Seljuk Turks), n. 332

Ama, n. 262

Amaëli, n. 296

Amalas (female disciple of Buddha), n. 73

Ambrose (bishop of Milan), chief author of the persecuting laws of the Theo-dosian Code, n. 235, yet he honourably protested against death being inflicted on the heretic Priscillian, 236; his noble reply to Theodosius, 238, 243

Ambrosius Marcellinus (historian), n. 99

Ammonites, n. 227, 247, 258, 309, 339, 341, 339, 361

Ammonius Saccas (Neo-Platonist philosopher), n. 192

Anamnesis, n. 147, 163

Ancestor-worship, n. 37, 77, 115, 119, 134, 146

Anaxagoras, n. 163, 168-170

Anaximander, n. 147, 163

Anaximenes, n. 147, 163

Anaxigoras, n. 163, 169-170

Antioch, n. 149, 162

Antioch, n. 148, 205, 322

Antiochus and Seleucids, n. 335, referred to as kings of Syria, 367, 388

Antiochus I, n. 396

Antiochus IV (Epiphanes), n. 343, 388; defeated the king of Egypt, but was forbidden by the Romans to conquer Egypt, 389; attacked Jerusalem, and established heathen worship in the temple, also through all Judaea, 390; Mattathias rebels against him, 391; the son of Mattathias, Judas Maccæus, recovers the temple and the main part of Jerusalem, 392; Antiochus dies or is slain the next year, 392, 393; in four out of the five prophetic visions of the book of Daniel, Antiochus Epiphanes is the last definite figure, 396, 398-402, n. 196, 292, 444

Antiochus Sidetes, n. 393

Antony of Padua, a Franciscan friar who reproved Ecelino for cruelty, n. 361

Aphrodite (Greek deity), n. 138

Apocrypha, books of, n. 362, 366, 367, 396, 404. (See also Ecclesi, 1st book of, and 2nd book of) Apollo (Greek deity), i. 138, 140, 141, 143, 144, 153, ii. 206

Apostel (friend of Socrates), i. 177

Apostles, list of the twelve, ii. 79; return of a twelfth apostle in the quoted place of Judas, 141; the title "apostle" not confined to the twelve, 142

Apostolicus (mediaeval reformers), ii. 371

Arabia, Arabs, &c., i. 35, ii. 159, 263; the title "apostle" presented to Constantine, accompanying it with the desire to lay aside "all speculations and curious questionings," Aristarchus of Samos, the ancient astronomer who anticipated Copernicus, 166-168

Aristides, i. 156

Aristocles, interlocutor with Socrates, i. 166-

Aristophanes (poet), i. 164, 209

Aristotle, instructor of Alexander of Macedon, i. 158; his account of God, 188; his extraordinary comprehensiveness, 189, 211; among the mediaeval Mahomedians he had a follower in Avicenna, i. 301; he is quoted by Abelard as laying stress on the value of intellectual doubt, 347; followed by the Schoolmen, 355; quoted by nine Roman Catholic dignitaries in their letter to the pope in the year 1538, 392. Treatises of Aristotle referred to: Politics, i. 187; Magna Moralia, 188; Metaphysics, 189; Nicomachean Ethics referred to but not named, 189

Arius, a presbyter of Alexandria, ii. 210; his controversy with the archbishop Alexander, 211; regarded as betraying the Christian principle, because he said that Jesus Christ, the Divine Son, had come into existence at a definite point of time, 212; the essence of his belief was to declare the Son inferior to the Father in his divine as well as in his human nature, 213; his belief condemned by the council of Nicaea, 214; yet some members of that council would have preferred not to characterise the Divine Son by the word Homo-ousios (Consubstantial), 215; Arius forbidden to enter Alexandria, and sent by the emperor Constantine into exile, 216; when he returned from his exile, he surrendered, or did not insist on, his most peculiar beliefs, but still did not accept the word Homo-ousios, 222; the creed quoted which he then drew up and presented to Constantine, accompanying it with the desire to lay aside "all speculations and curious questionings,"

Ark (of the covenant), i. 242, 264

Asaph, said to be David's chief-choirmaster, i. 386

Asa (king of Judah), i. 221, 294, 338

Asaph, said to be David's chief-choirmaster, i. 386

Ascanius, i. xiii, 47, 54, 61, 64, 65, ii. 83, 252, 254
INDEX

Asi (seaport on the west coast of Africa), p. 287
Asia Minor, i. 91, 138, 154, 155, 212, ii. 165, 177, 182, 186, 259, 282, 324, 325
Asmoneans, i. 403. (See Maccabees)
Assassins, (king of Northern India), propagator of Buddhist religion, i. 76, ii. 204
Asser (learned man at the court of Alfred), ii. 303
Assuan papyri, Aramaic, discovered in the Delphic oracle, 153, 154; the establishment of the Athenian democracy and the development of Athenian energy, 154; the Persian wars and the great increase of Athenian power, 154-157; the war between Athens and Sparta, and the defeat of Athens, 157, 158; the survival of Athens for future intellectual achievements, 158; the sceptical vein pervading the Athenian mind in the age of Pericles, 163, 164; the reasons why the Athenians condemned Socrates to death, 172, 173; avoided by Plato at first after his partial success and final failure, the death of Socrates, but afterwards the scene of Plato's lectures, 188; the reasons why the political power of Athens was so brief, 197. (See also 309, 335, and n. 336, 337, 341)
Astruc, Jean, first discoverer of composite atoms, recently discovered to be composite, i. 12
Atonement (doctrine of), ii. 418-420. (See also i. vii)
Attila, ii. 220, 238, 284, 285, 299
Athanasian creed, ii. 213
Athanasius, principal defender of Nicene Creed, ii. 2; his controversy with Arius, 212, 213; he set himself to enforce uniformity in the expression of belief throughout the Church, 214; he was present at the council of Nicaea as archdeacon, being in attendance on the archbishop of Alexandria, 221; he narrowed the Church, as Ezra narrowed the Jewish nation, 221, 222; yet on one occasion was willing to accept the principle of tolerance, if his opponents would have agreed to it, 225; much indebted to the protection of Julius bishop of Rome, 224; elected archbishop of Alexandria, 226; his harsh and intolerant conduct towards Arius, 229, 230; but was himself unjustly accused, 230, 231, condemned on a frivolous charge, and banished, 232; said (which was regrettable) that the death of Arius was a divine judgment, 233; was in the wrong in his treatment of Arius, but right as against Eusebius of Nicomedia, 234; persecuted by Constantius, 234, 235; died in honour as archbishop of Alexandria, 236; an antagonist, 235; premature in his endeavour to enforce uniformity, but the most vigorous character whom the fourth and fifth centuries produced, 237; a criticism of his theology, 248
Avesta, see Zoroastrian sacred books

© in this web service Cambridge University Press
www.cambridge.org
INDEX

Avicenna, Moslem philosopher, and writer on medicine, p. 287

Baal, Baalim, the deity, or deities, worshipped in Canaan, and by the Phoenicians, i. 247, 248; sometimes identified with Jehovah, but generally a rival deity, 248; the name honored by Saul, and probably by Gideon, 251, 252; the worship comparatively obscure till Jezebel persuaded Ahab to build a great temple to Baal, 270, 271; the bitter quarrel which ensued on this in northern Israel, 271-273; Jehu destroys this temple, and slays the worshippers of Baal, 276; the worship of Baal, which still went on, was opposed by the prophets, 276, 296, and put down by Josiah (temporarily), 296; polytheism recurs afterwards at Jerusalem, 305

Bab, the, saintly Moslem reformer, ii. 332

Babur (emperor of Hindostán), ii. 328; his remarkable and touching death, 328, 329; first of the Mogul line, 332

Babylon, Babylonism, early history and religion of, i. 31-34; the seat of one branch of the Magi, 90-92; the place where Alexander died, 169; the scene (under the name of "the land of the Chaldees") of Abraham's early life, 34, 226; at a certain period subject to Assyria, 294; the Babylonians rejoiced at the fall of Nineveh, 308; they take the land of Israel into their empire, 305, 306; the rebellion of the Jews against Babylon, 309; the captivity of the Jews in Babylonia, 311, 313, 315; the conquest of Babylon by Cyrus, and deliverance of the Jews, 316, 318, 510, 512, 322, 324, 326, 333-337, 540; the Jews remaining in Babylonia wrote the early Biblical history, 347; the Jews of after generations ignored as far as they could the Babylonian captivity, 231, 380; the Babylonian empire mentioned in the book of Daniel, 397; in New Testament, Babylon means Rome, ii. 55, 164

Bacchus (Greek deity), i. 138

Bach, John Sebastian, religious musical composer, paralleled with Perugino in painting, p. 423

Bacon, Francis, ii. 417, 449

Bacon, Roger, the first propounder in modern times of the philosophy of experience, ii. 348; illustrations of this in physical knowledge, 349, in religious knowledge, 350, 351. (See also 365)

Bactria, a country where Zoroaster preached, i. 89, 100

Bagdad, captured and sacked by the Mongols, ii. 284, 285, 331

Bagos or Bagoes, minister of Artaxerxes Ochus, i. 363

Bajazet II (sultan), i. 325

Balaam, i. 244

Balb, the scene, probably, of Zoroaster's death, i. 100

Ball, Sir Robert, i. 11

Bar-Kuria, a Jewish clan, ii. 276

Baptism, as administered by John the Baptist, repentance and a measure of faith implied in it, n. 60, 61; the baptism of Jesus, 3, the meaning of this examined, 62-65; Zacheus not baptized, 107; established as a Christian sacrament by the apostles in accordance with what they held to be a command of their risen Master, 142

Bar-Cochba, leader of the Jewish rebellion against the Romans in Hadrian's time, ii. 178

Barmecides, a clan at first favoured by Harun Arashid, afterwards massacred by that caliph, ii. 291

Bartholomae (German critic), i. 88, 89

Bartholomew (apostle), ii. 79

Bartholomew de Diaz, discoverer of the Cape of Good Hope, ii. 357

Bartholomew, ii. 108

Basil of Csesareia, a lover of nature, a founder of monastic communities, an opponent of Arianism, ii. 242, 252

Basileides, a distinguished Gnostic, ii. 187. (See Gnostics)

Bavaria, archbishop of the eastern church, courageous against the Tartars, n. 326

Bastille, ii. 428

Bathsheba, ii. 290, 294

Batu, grandson of Jingis Khan, ii. 283, 325

Baur, F. C., ii. 147

Bayle, ii. 428, 429

Beaumarchais, French writer, ii. 427

Bede, ii. 9, 259

Beethoven, i. 423

Bela and the Dragon (apocryphal book), i. 396

Belgium, ii. 450

Belshazzar, ii. 291, 255

Belshazzar, i. 366

Benedict, the Christian saint who first convinced the world of the dignity of labour, ii. 292 (see also 243); his rule severe but inspired by tenderness, 253; his connexion with literary labour, 254; his demand of celibacy from his monks, 254, 255; the self-denying impulse which he fostered communicated itself to others, 256, 257; he gave the type, which others followed, of monastic life, 290

Bengal, ii. 330

Bentham, ii. 113

Berkley, the English philosopher, ii. 147

Bethlehem, ii. 427

Betrayal, the, i. 384

Bible, the, ii. 426, 427

Bible and the Dragon (apocryphal book), i. 396

Bielshazzer, ii. 291

Bielshazzer, ii. 291

Belgium, ii. 450

Belshazzar, ii. 291, 255

Belshazzar, ii. 291, 255

Benedict, the Christian saint who first convinced the world of the dignity of labour, ii. 292 (see also 243); his rule severe but inspired by tenderness, 253; his connexion with literary labour, 254; his demand of celibacy from his monks, 254, 255; the self-denying impulse which he fostered communicated itself to others, 256, 257; he gave the type, which others followed, of monastic life, 290

© in this web service Cambridge University Press
INDEX

Benedict XIII (one of the Avignon popes), II. 375
Benedictine order, n. 219, 252, 294, 311; the rule might with advantage have been modified with the change of times, but was not, 306
Benjamin (of Tudela), II. 249, 250, 256, 310
Berengar, opposed the doctrine of transubstantiation, but was forced to recant and accept it, n. 302
Berkeley (bishop and philosopher), n. xi
Berlin, n. 458
Bernard of Clairvaux, a preacher of the second crusade, II. 322, 324, but was not, 360; 50 B.C., married, and had an infant son, 59, 60; felt the world's misery so strongly that he left his home, 59, 60; practised asceticism for six years, 61; renounces asceticism and becomes enlightened, 62; announces love as the feeling which all who are enlightened should cultivate, 62, 63; was tempted to seek death but rejected the temptation, 63; resolved to preach, 64; converted five ascetic Brahmins, 64, 65; regards the pursuit of pleasure as intrinsically wrong, but the relief of pain right, 65, 66; accepts the doctrine of transmigration of souls, 66, but holds the highest happiness to be Nirvana, or the deliverance from personal existence, 67; undervalues outward action, 68; but inculcates forgiveness, self-correction, and the performance of duty, 68, 69; the thought of God, or the Gods, imperfectly apprehended by him, 70; he embraced poverty, but his chief disciples were not among the poor, 71; received into his society women as well as men, 72, 73; his death described, 74, 75; his doctrine spread all over India after his death, 76; but gradually vanished from the mainland of India while Brahminism revived, 77; Buddhism has survived only in Burmah, Ceylon, the Chinese empire, and Japan, 77; a reference to it, n. 57; the universality of Buddha's interest in mankind mentioned, 204
Buddhist priests, n. 287
Buddha-Karita, n. 59
Buddhas, properly a title, "the Enlightened One," n. 58; the person thus entitled had as an individual name Siddartha, as a family name Gautama, 58; born in the north of India, shortly after 500 B.C., married, and had an infant son, 59; felt the world's misery so strongly that he left his home, 59, 60; practised asceticism for six years, 61; renounces asceticism and becomes enlightened, 62; announces love as the feeling which all who are enlightened should cultivate, 62, 63; was tempted to seek death but rejected the temptation, 63; resolved to preach, 64; converted five ascetic Brahmins, 64, 65; regards the pursuit of pleasure as intrinsically wrong, but the relief of pain right, 65, 66; accepts the doctrine of transmigration of souls, 66, but holds the highest happiness to be Nirvana, or the deliverance from personal existence, 67; undervalues outward action, 68; but inculcates forgiveness, self-correction, and the performance of duty, 68, 69; the thought of God, or the Gods, imperfectly apprehended by him, 70; he embraced poverty, but his chief disciples were not among the poor, 71; received into his society women as well as men, 72, 73; his death described, 74, 75; his doctrine spread all over India after his death, 76; but gradually vanished from the mainland of India while Brahminism revived, 77; Buddhism has survived only in Burmah, Ceylon, the Chinese empire, and Japan, 77; a reference to it, n. 57; the universality of Buddha's interest in mankind mentioned, 204
Buddhist priests, n. 257
Buddhism: treatises: Buddha-Karita, n. 59, 60, 64; Tenyupa Sutta, n. 62; Nipata, n. 63, 70; Book of the Great Decease, n. 63, 70, 74; Mahadvagga, n. 64, 72; Mah Sadanassa Sutta, n. 65; Dhammapada, n. 67, 68; Sutra of Forty-two chapters, n. 71; Questions of King Milinda, n. 76
Buffon, n. 437, 438
Bugia, city in N. Africa, n. 354
Bulgaria, n. 283, 331
Bunsen, n. 446
Bunyan, John, n. 413, 415
Burj, B. J., n. 143
Butler (bishop), n. 426, 448, 449
Byron (poet), n. 357, 49
Byzantium and Byzantine empire, n. 47, 227, 291, 292. (See Constantinople)
Cabul, n. 329
Cesar (Caius Julius), n. 136, 211, n. 54

© in this web service Cambridge University Press www.cambridge.org
INDEX

479

Cæsar in the general sense of emperor, p. 113
Cæsarea Philippi, p. 94, 102, 116
Caïphas, n. 53, 124, 125, 141
Cajetan, Thomas (cardinal), n. 394, 396
Calas, p. 430
Caldecott, R. M. (biographer of Baber), p. 329
Calvisiam, defence of, by J. A. Froude quoted, p. 412, 413
Cambridge Medieval History, p. 309
Cambyses, would appear to have been a fanatic opponent of idolatry, following the precepts of the Magi, i. 100-102; his character and his death briefly sketched
Canaan, land of, i. 225, 226, 231, 233, 235, 236, 239, 244, 246-248
Canaanites, a mistake to suppose that Moses desired their extermination, i. 236; the conquest of them by the Israelites a slow process, 246, 247; many of them enslaved by Solomon, 267; the race survived in New Testament times, n. 90.
Candide, n. 429
Canossa, n. 317, 318
Canute (king of England), n. 300
Carpini (missionary to China), i. 133, 134
Carpocrates, a Gnostic of whom little is known, n. 187
Carinthia, i. 203, n. 197
Cassiodorus, the preserver of classical literature in mediaeval times, p. 255, 264
Caste (among Hindus), characterised generally, i. 38, 39, 50, 58, 76; Brahmins (Brahmanas), i. 50-52, 58; Vaishyas, i. 50-52, 54; Sudras, i. 50-52, 76
Catacombs (in Rome), II. 180
Cathari, see Gnostics
Riverina, Bora, Luther's wife, her letter written after his death, n. 408, 409
Catherine of Siena, n. 448
Cebes, friend of Socrates, i. 177, 180, 181
Celsus, n. 200
Ceremonies, the error of overvaluing them, n. 94, 114; the special application of this consideration by Paul to the Jewish ceremonial law, 162; the attitude of the apostle Peter in regard to this examined, 163, 164
Ceres (Roman deity), i. 208
Cerineus, n. 417
Cherherphon, friend of Socrates, i. 160, 161, 177
Cheronea, battle of, i. 138
Charles, Dr R. H., i. 404
Charles Martel, flung back the Saracens from France, i. 251, II. 259, 278
Charles, Dr R. H., i. 404
Charles VI (king of France), n. 341
Charles Martel, flung back the Saracens from France, II. 340
China, n. 31, 34, 37; the history traced, 111-117, 129-131, 133, 134; the literature and philosophy, 118-128, 132. (See also 136, n. 57, 251, 283, 287, 356; and compare the next three headings, "Chinese Literature, &c.," "Chinese monarchs, &c." and "Chinese religion")
Chinese literature before the Christian era: Shuh Kung, history, i. 115-117; writings of Memocia, i. 123; Shih Kung, poetry, i. 117-119; Yi Kung, divination, i. 120; T'ao Teh Kung (Lao-tze's philosophy), i. 121-124; writings of Sena Khion, i. 124; Hsiao Kung, i. 126; Li Kî, i. 126; Appendices to Yi Kung (by Confucius and his followers), i. 127; writings of Kwang-tze, i. 131, 132
Chinese monarchs and dynasties before the Christian era: Fu-hsi, legendary, i. 112; T'ao, before 2300 B.C., appointed astronomers, i. 113; Yü, first of the Hsia dynasty, 2205 B.C., i. 116, 117; Thang, first of the Shang dynasty, 1766 B.C., i. 114, 116, 117; Wû, first of the Cháu dynasty, 1122 B.C., i. 118; Shih Hwang Ti, first of the Ch’in dynasty, 246 B.C., i. 120; Kaotí, first of the Han dynasty, 206 B.C., i. 133
INDEX

Chinese religion: Tiên (Heaven) and Shang Ti (God) express the Supreme Being, i. 115; spirits of natural phenomena were also worshipped, and still more, spirits of departed ancestors, 115; Confucianism (which may be called a religion) not greatly corrupted by superstition, Táoism and Chinese Buddhism more so, 116; quotations illustrating religious temperament of Chinese, 118; prayer of the duke of Cháu, 119; temples, altars, and sacrifices, 120; a remarkable religious quotation from Láo-tsze, 123; Confucius afraid of offending against heaven, 128; worship of ancestors not devoid of some true though imperfect instinct, 134; the religion of China too much associated with politics, i. 57

Chivalry, i. xii, ii. 304, 305

Chorazín, ii. 83, 84

Christ, the meaning of the word explained, i. viii, ii. 454. (See Jesus Christ)

Chronicles, books of, i. 251, 261, 266, 294, 358, 366, 380

Chrysostom, his misfortunes and saintly character, ii. 240

Church, the Christian Church is the main subject of chapters xix. to xxxv. in this work; the nature of the Church is explained most clearly in vol. ii. chapter xxxvii. pp. 455-457. The division between the eastern church and the western church is first referred to, ii. 209, 210; again, 246, 257, 260-262, 292, 301, 323, 353; the eastern church is also specially referred to in ii. 228, 295-297, 318, 320, 325, 326, 333, 334. Otherwise the western church is the chief theme, where details are entered upon

Church (lean), ii. 303

Ciceron, his affirmation that Rome owed her victorious position in the world to her religion, i. 195, 196; his common sense as a philosopher, 211; his political merit, 211; the greatest prose writer of ancient Italy, 212

Cid, the (Spanish poem), ii. 357

Cimabue (painter), ii. 356

Circumcelliones (religious schismatics), ii. 236

Circumcision, adopted by Abraham and his clan, i. 226; probably a symbol of self-sacrifice, 226; the practice not kept up by the Israelites in their Egyptian bondage, i. 227; but after their invasion of Canaan they were all circumcised, 264; circumcision praticed by the Samaritans of later times, and enforced by John Hyrcanus on the Idumæans (Edomites), 394; Herod a circumcised man, 403; up to a certain point it was not wrong for the first Christians, who were Jews, to keep up the practice of circumcision, ii. 156; but that Cornelius, a converted heathen, should remain uncircumcised, was right, 160; Jewish Christians conceded this, but still held that the uncircumcised Christian had an inferior status, 161; the apostle Paul steadily set his face against this contention, 161; the tendency of Peter was gradually to yield to Paul on this point, 163; the reason for this, 164; Paul’s view was that circumcision among the Jews had been merely the stamp by which faith was recorded for men’s knowledge, 165; Cæsarian monastic order, ii. 311, 360

Clara of Assisi, ii. 362

Cleantus, Greek poet and philosopher, i. 164

Cleisthenes ( Athenian statesman), i. 153, 154

Clement IV (pope), ii. 350

Clement V (pope), ii. 370

Clement of Alexandria, one of the most enlightened of the ancient Fathers of the Church, ii. 177, 179, 192, 195

Clement of Rome, an ancient sermon, called his second epistle, quoted, ii. 104; one of the Fathers in whom the military aspect of Christianity is most noticeable, and why this was, 180, 181

Clementine Homilies, ii. 163, 306, 308

Clementine Recognitions (translated by the Rev. Thomas Smith, D.D.), one of the sources of the spurious Papal Decretals, ii. 309-308

Clopas, ii. 135, 136

Clough, Arthur Hugh (poet), title-page, also ii. 450, 452

Cluny, monastery of, ii. 311, 360

Clausius, i. 105

Corderly, Samuel Taylor (poet and religious writer), ii. 257, 449, 454, 467

Coligny (Huguenot), ii. 413

Columbus, ii. 357

Comitia centuriata, the more aristocratic voting assembly at Rome, i. 194, 198-201

Comitia tributa, the more democratic voting assembly at Rome, which gradually obtained equal power with the comitia centuriata, ii. 201, 204, 206

Comte, Auguste, ii. 435

Concordat of Worms (scene of compromise on the investiture question), ii. 319

Confucius, the philosopher through whom the Chinese character received its final stamp, i. 111, 113-115; born 551 B.C., ii. 120; his interview with Láo-tsze, 125; less original than Láo-tsze, but more practical, 126; a lover of the ancients, 126; he advocated reverence, but not slavish reverence, 126; quotations
Constantine, succeeded his father as emperor in the west, 306 A.D., II. 201; favourable, like his father, to the Christians, and in the year 313 joined with the eastern emperor, Licinius, in issuing the edict of Milan, proclaiming universal toleration, 201; became in 324 A.D. religiously consecrated, 230; having as sons Christian bishops as their pupil, 206; summoned the council of Nicaea, 210; after that council banished Arius, 216, and issued a persecuting edict, 216, 217; a general characterisation of his action, 223; in spite of all his errors, a great man, 224; but his vacillation on the religious question was not good for the end which he proposed to himself, i.e. the peace of the empire, 226; was moved by the appeal of his sister to Treves on the Moselle, regarded him as still archbishop of Alexandria, and no successor was appointed there, 233. The meaning and force of his act in founding Constantinople noted, 227, 228; religiously consecrated, 230; the scene of the death of Arius, 233; for more than eleven centuries held out as the centre of the empire against all enemies, 238; the splendour of Constantinople in the middle ages, 261, 262; there was a certain purpose of helping it in the crusades, 318, 321, 323; captured by the Turks under Mohammed II, 325; the result of this was a great diffusion of Greek manuscripts, and Greek interpreters of those manuscripts, in Christian countries, 395. (See also 282, 333, 429) Constantinople, founded with the intention that it should be the Christian capital of the Roman empire, II. 227, 228; religiously consecrated, 230; the scene of the death of Arius, 233; for more than eleven centuries held out as the centre of the empire against all enemies, 238; the splendour of Constantinople in the middle ages, 261, 262; there was a certain purpose of helping it in the crusades, but in the end it was fatally injured by the crusades, 318, 321, 323; captured by the Turks under Mohammed II, 325; the result of this was a great diffusion of Greek manuscripts, and Greek interpreters of those manuscripts, in Christian countries, 395. (See also 282, 333, 429) Constantinus (father of Constantine), II. 201

INDEX

Constantius (son of Constantine), II. 223, 234, 235
Connex, i. 194, 201
Contrat Social, II. 433
Copernicus, i. 189, n. 358
Cordova, II. 97
Corinth, i. 180, 181
Corinthians, i. 157, ii. 182
Corinthe, ii. 417
Cornelius, II. 160
Coronelius, II. 190
Corrodi (Biblical critic), n. 444
Councils of the Church. More important are: Nicaea, 325 A.D., II. 9, 23, 210-219, 221-226, 230, 234; Constantinople, 381 A.D., 211, 212; Ephesus, 431 A.D., II. 219; Chalcedon, 451 A.D., not named, but Eutyches referred to, II. 246; Third Lateran, 1179 A.D., n. 366; Fourth Lateran, 1215 A.D., II. 366; Vienne, 1311 A.D., n. 354; Constantinople, 1414-1415 A.D., II. 374-377; Trent, 1564-1566 A.D., n. 392, 393, 414. Of lesser importance are: Tyre, 335 A.D. II. 224, 231-233; Constantinople, 667 A.D., ii. 311; Orleans, 1017 A.D., n. 302; Constance, 1094 A.D., II. 318; Piacenza, 1095 A.D., II. 318; Lombers, 1176 A.D., II. 364, 365; Avignon, 1209 A.D., n. 363; Lavaur, 1215 A.D., n. 356; Montpellier, 1215 A.D., n. 353; Toulouse, 1119 A.D., II. 364, 1229 A.D., n. 365
Cowper (poet), ii. 446
Cramer, ii. 413
Cretes, i. 142, 143
Crise, i. 180, 181
Cito, friend of Socrates, giving his name to a dialogue of Plato, i. 163, 177, 179, 182
Crito, friend of Socrates, I. 165
Crowell, professor, i. 60
Crowe and Cavalcaselle, n. 359
Cromwell, ii. 415, 415
Crod, and Cavalcaselle, n. 359
Crusades, an exception to the peaceable ways of the Church, I. 293; their first conception, 318; their history, and the lesson to be drawn from them, 320-324; Raymond Lull gradually convinced of their error, 326, 354; a crusade against heretics, 364; against a temporal king, 374
Crumm, i. 185
Cunnt, M., t. 91
Cuneiform inscriptions, i. 31, 78, 103, 278
Cunibert, bishop of Tunin, ii. 315
Cunningham (Archaeological Reports), i. 64
Cyprians, Christian Father and martyr, I. 198, 200
Cyprus, ii. 161, 353
Cyrene, ii. 161
Cyrtus, the conqueror of the Medes, not a Zoroastrian, 186; the imaginative life of him written by Xenophon (Cyropedia), 181, 182; hailed by the prophet of the exile as the deliverer of Israel, 316, 318, 319; he gave permission to the Jews to return from

© in this web service Cambridge University Press www.cambridge.org
INDEX

Babylon to their own land, but did not actually help them to do so, 325, 336-338, 344, 362, 363, 368, 369, 370, 371, 373-375, 377, 379, 382, 384

Daērā, evil demons in the Zoroastrian religion, corresponding to the Devas, the deities of the Aryan Hindus, r. 87, 88

Dakyns, H. G., r. xiv, 161, 163, 173, 174, 177, 182

D’Alembert, n. 427, 431

Damascus, i. 265, 283, 284, 285, II. 20, 169, 237

Dan, i. 257, 268, 269

Dane, n. 299, 300

Daniel, i. 382, 397, 403

Daniel (book of), i, 224, 282, 395-404, II. 59, 89, 92, 119

Dante, n. 309, 357

Darius, son of Hystaspes, a worshipper of Auranazda, i. 78; calls Auranazda (in the Behistun inscription) “the god of the Arysana,” 95; his composition of the Behistun inscription, and quotations from that inscription, 97-99; an explanation of the reason why he never mentions Zoroaster, though following the Zoroastrian religion, 98, 99; after the death of Cambyses, he put down the Magian revolt and other revolts, 102, 103; the Behistun inscription record a record of these victories, 103; institutof the Calendar used by the Persia at this day, 104; his ancestry, 110; his subjugation of the rebellious Ionians, but defeat by the Athenians at Marathon, 155; the question raised, whether it was in his reign that Zerubbabel built the temple at Jerusalem, 325; answered in the negative, 335, 336. (See also 96, 355, 377, 386)

Darius Codomannus, the last Persian king, defeated and dethroned by Alexander, i. 363, 392, 383

Darius the Mede, i. 362

Darius Nothus, i. 335, 336; favoured the Jews, 344, 345, 347; the book of Ezra, apart from chapters ii. iii. iv. 1-6, emphatically implies that Zerubbabel rebuilt the temple in the reign of this king, 348, 349; a confirmation of this in the fact that the Aramaic psalms tell us that this king took an interest in the Egyptian Jews, 353; the first book of Esdras confirms this view, 353; Egypt revolts from Persia in the reign of this king, 358; he helped the Jews more by his friendship than by material assistance, 365, 366; his relations to Zerubbabel (a romantic story), 369. (See also 379, 381, 384)

Darmesteter (French Oriental scholar), r. 78, 105; passages quoted from his translation of the Zendādād and the Yasta, 89, 90, 105-107

Darwin, Charles, his Origin of Species, r. 18; his observation of the fact of Artificial Selection, 20; his theory of Natural Selection, 21; various observations in regard to it, 22, 23; the relation of it to mind and the soul, 24-20; the relation of it to some purpose, presumably divine, not altogether ignored by Darwin, 27; in part a promoter of scepticism, but never wanting in humility and candour, II. 448

David, the best known personally of all the characters of the Old Testament, i. 136; inherited the monotheism of Abraham, 220; the story that he was anointed king by Samuel can hardly be true, though he was probably much influenced by Samuel, 253, 254; that he soothed Saul by his harp-playing probably true, his single combat with Goliath more doubtful, 254, 255; yet a brave warrior, 255; popular with the Israelites, and beloved by Saul’s son Jonathan, 255; had to fly from Saul, and gathered together a band of wild warriors, with whom he fled to the court of Achish, king of Gath, 255, 256; loyal to Saul, but unscrupulous towards alien races, some of whom he murdered without just cause, 258, 259; in spite of his public cruelties and many sins, a tender-hearted man, 260; he apprehended the spiritual and sublime nature of God better than God’s moral nature, 262; a few of the psalms now extant may have been composed by him, though generally not quite in the form in which they have come down to us, 262, 263; especially honoured, loved, and remembered by his own tribe of Judah, 263, 264; we cannot put him so high, nor was he the equal of Abraham or of Moses, 263, 264; in his time Israel was one of the great nations of the earth, 265; to Ezekiel an ideal king, 312; some more remarks about psalms which recall his time, 343. (See also 394 and r. 108)

Deborah (prophetess), r. 249

Decretals (epigraphs), n. 389-390

Delphi, oracle of, mentioned in the Odyssey, r. 140; displaced Dodona as the centre of Greek religion, 140, 141; sacred in early times to various deities, but by the Dorians finally established as a shrine of Apollo, 143; its influence exercised in setting Athens free from the despot Hippias, 153, 154; the
INDEX 483

Dioscorus (historian), p. 363
"Dioecetius, Epistle to," p. 183, 184
Dionysius Exiguus, p. 308
Dionysius of Halicarnassus, r. 195
Dionysus, Greek deity, also called Bacchus, r. 138
Divination, in China, r. 116, 119, 120, 130; compare, in Israel, the Urim and Thummim, 302
Döderlein (Biblical critic), p. 444
Dodona, r. 140, 141, 143
Doeg, Edomite in service of Saul, r. 342
Dominic de Guzman, founder of the order of Dominicans, p. 363, 364, 367, 368
Domitian (Roman emperor), p. 65, 67
Don, battle of the, n. 326
Donatism, schism in the African church, n. 240
Dorians, their character one of persistent strength, an element not common among the Greeks, r. 144; colonists in Crete, 142; their home in northern Greece, 142, 143; established the worship of Apollo at Delphi, 143; made the Hellenic tongue prevalent over all places where Delphi was honoured, 143; descended into the Peloponnesus and conquered it, becoming the leading race among the Greeks, 144; their temperament rather narrow, 145
Douglas, Sir R. K., author of works on China, &c., r. 111, 124, 134
Dravidian race (the highest race in India before the arrival there of the Aryan Hindus), r. 38
Driver, Dr S. R., r. 375, 401
Duchene (ecclesiastical historian), n. 435
Duty, some of the chief provinces of it mentioned, viz. in regard to restoration of health, 456; the relation of Christian churches towards each other, 456-458; the relation of States to one another, 458-460; the relation of the sexes to each other, 461; the relation of men to the inferior animals, 461, 462
Easter, p. 165
Edict of Nantes, revocation of, p. 417, 426
Edom, Edomites, r. 227, 228, 242, 258, 259, 264, 312, 332, 339, 341, 359. (See also Esau, and Idumeans)
Edward the Confessor, n. 335
Edward I (king of England), n. 338
Edward III (king of England), p. 338
Egypt, early history and religion of, r. 4, 30-34; religious influences came from Egypt to imperial Rome, 212; the Israelites first learned the art of writing in Egypt, 224; their sojourn and bondage in Egypt, 229-233; their deliverance from Egypt, 234-240; Egypt a boundary of the kingdom ruled by David and Solomon, 258, 265; the prophecy of Isaiah respecting Egypt, 291; the king of Egypt defeated and slew Josiah and subjected Judah, 303, but is himself defeated by Nebuchadnezzar, 305; the Jews in Egypt are instructed by Darius Nothus as to the manner of keeping the passover, 353; and send a letter to the governors of Judaea and Samaria, 356; the successful revolt of Egypt against the king of Persia, 355; conquered by Alexander of Macedon, 159; Egypt under the Ptolemies, 366, 388, 390; assailed by Antiochus Epiphanes, but the Romans forbid him to conquer it, 369; produces the Neoplatonic philosophy, r. 182; the monks of Egypt often fanatical, 236, 252; the Christians of Egypt intolerant, 265; conquest of Egypt by the Moelmes, 278; the Fatimite caliphs of Egypt, 321; expelled by the Seljuk Turks, 324; the Mamelukes of Egypt, 324. (See also Alexand-ria)
INDEX

Electricity, i. 10, 12
Elephantine, see Aswan papyri
Elexinian mysteries, i. 152
Elhanan, a claimant for the honour of having slain Goliath, i. 265
El (judge of Israel), the words spoken to him illustrate the conditional character of all God’s promises, ii. 382
Elijah, in what relation he stood to the Galatians, n. 17, 19, 154, 157, 159, 160, 165, 170, 283; Ephesians, ii. 164; Philippians, n. 7, 164, 245; Colossians, ii. 164; 1 Thessalonians, ii. 25; his home in Gilead, east of Jordan, 271; a faithful man, of the warlike type of Moses, but not equal to Moses, 272; his great fame due to his recorded miracles, 219, 272; the impressiveness, and yet the untrustworthiness, of these miraculous narratives, 272, 273; his flight to Horeb no impeachment of his courage, 273, 274; a preacher of righteousness, but not equal in seminative power to Isaiah and the prophets of Judah, 274, 275; yet he may have kindled those prophets, 277; his death, 275; comments on his warlike spirit, 276, 292; his part in the vision of the Transfiguration, ii. 99, 100. (See also p. 99)
Elisha, he cannot have condemned Jeroboam’s “golden calves,” yet not an idolater, i. 268, 269; his call to be Elijah’s disciple, 274; his incitement to Jehu to rebel and overthrow the dynasty of Ahab, 275-277. (See also n. 293)
El Istachri, Arabian geographer, ii. 287
Elohim, the name of the Divine Being probably used by Abraham, i. 225
Empedocles (Greek philosopher), i. 163
Energy, the question propounded, whether an infinite store of it is accessible to us, i. 5; the affirmative answer suggested by Herbert Spencer, 6; the connexion of this answer with the religious principle, 7, 8; the mysterious source of energy, 13, 14; the increase of living energy through spiritual agencies, ii. 26; spiritual energy more penetrating than physical energy, 309; energy as an object to be aimed at, 451. (See also i. xiii)
England, the English, n. 67; their conversion to Christianity, 235; England in medieval times, 299, 299, 300, 323, 334-342, 371, 372; in Reformation times, 410, 413, 415, 417; in post-Reformation times, 425, 426, 436, 446-449, 458, 459. (See also ii. 139)
Ephesus, Ephesians, ii. 156, 173, 175, 181
Ephraim (tribe of), i. 250, 258, 259; sometimes used as equivalent to the ten tribes, 290, 312
Epictetus, i. 189, 214
Epictetus, Epicureans, i. 214, 215
Epiistles, the New Testament epistles arranged in the customary order, with the pages on which they are quoted or referred to: Romans, ii. 7, 27, 28, 161, 166-168, 171-173, 407; 1 Corinthians, ii. 17, 26, 27, 35, 54, 144, 171, 173, 191; 2 Corinthians, ii. 27, 28, 148, 159, 163, 169-172, 464; Galatians, ii. 17, 19, 154, 157, 159, 160, 165, 170, 283; Ephesians, ii. 164; Philippians, n. 7, 164, 245; Colossians, ii. 164; 1 Thessalonians, ii. 25; 2 Thessalonians, ii. 173; 1 Timothy, ii. 171; 2 Timothy, n. 164, 171; Titus, n. 171; (Philemon not referred to); Hebrews, ii. 27, 166, 167, 169, 171, 179; James, ii. 27, 158; 1 Peter, ii. 17, 18, 27, 54, 164, 165, 172, 419; 2 Peter, ii. 27, 185; 1 John, ii. 27, 46, 51, 53, 175, 186, 452; 2 John, ii. 27; 3 John, ii. 27; Jude, ii. 27. Epistles generally referred to, ii. 21, 27, 166
Erasmus, ii. 390, 391, 406
Essai, i. 230
Etruria, 1st book of, the question of its value, i. 348, 349; a great authority with Josephus, 362; brought into comparison with the book of Ezra, throughout the first Appendix to chapter xiv.
Etrusca, 2nd book of, n. 130
Esdras, (i.e. I Esdras), i. 251
Eusebius (seer of the Jews), i. 406
Esther, book of, i. 336, 338, 344, 362, 384
Eternal life, see Immortality
Ethiopia, i. 240
Etruscans, i. 183-185, 197, 202, 209
Eudocia, i. 189
Euphrates, ii. 265, n. 287
Euripides (poet), i. 163, 209
Eurybiades (Spartan commander), ii. 77
Eusebius of Caesarea, ii. 47, 176, 177; the sanest and most judicious of the historians of early Christianity, 224; not unfriendly to Arius, 224
Eusebius of Nicomedia, a wavering as regards the Nicene Creed, ii. 216; banished by Constantine, 216, 225, 226; a friend, but not a judicious friend, of Arius, 222, 223; recalled from banishment, 227; forward in bringing unjust charges against Athanasius, 230, 231; his conduct as respects Athanasius quite wrong, 234
Eutyches (heretic), i. 240
Eurasus, friend of Arius, ii. 214, 228
Evolution, ii. 5, 17, 19
Exodus, book of, i. 223, 224; in one point more correct than the book of Genesis, 225 (see also 229-234, 238, 243); more correct in one respect than the book of Deuteronomy, 236; the compilation of the book, 347; a reference to it, 387, 398. (See also ii. 153, 160, 176)
INDEX

Exodus, the, I. 218–220, 234–240, 296, 322, II. 27, 153, 467
Exekiel, preaches to the exiles on the river Chebar, in Babylonia, I. 311; his vehement censure of the people of Jerusalem, 311, 312; his tone changes to consolation after Jerusalem has fallen, 312, 313; he predicts that Ephraim and Judah shall be reconciled, and that the whole nation shall live happily in their ancient land, 312, 313; his picture of the Jerusalem of the future, 315. (See also 360)
Ezra, I. 197; his relation to the book of Deuteronomy, 300, 301; his rigid legislation, 332, 335, 336; sent by Artaxerxes Mnemon to Jerusalem, 359; his conduct described, 359, 365; a narrow-minded but strong man, 360, 361, 365; called "the scribe," 368, 371; his pedigree, 380; the narrowing tendency among the Jews was brought to a head by him, 385–387, II. 19, 59, 221; has some analogy in his position to Athanasius in the Christian Church, II. 221, also to Hildebrand, 313
Ezra, book of, I. 320, 333–335, 348, 349, 354, 356, 358; not used by Josephus, 362; a dissection of the historical character of it, resulting in the conclusion that chapters ii. and iii. are incorrect (though iv. 1–5 is misplaced), in Appendix i. to chapter xiv.
Fall, doctrine of, II. 454, 462, 403
Farrer, Lord, I. 27
Fatima, daughter of Mohammed and wife of Ali, II. 269, 279
Fatimoccalips of Egypt in the eleventh century, being the descendents of Ali and Fatima, II. 321, 324
Felicitas (Christian woman and martyr), II. 198, 199
Fénelon, II. 434
Ferdinand and Isabella, I. 327
Ferrier, James Frederick, a clear-seeing Scots philosopher, I. xii; his account of the Stoics quoted, 212–214; a remark of his on the process by which truth is reached, II. 313
Festus (Roman governor), II. 20, 171
Feudal system, II. 298, 299, 301.
Fichte, I. xi, II. 440
Filioque (the word in the Nicene creed not accepted by Eastern church), II. 1
Firdousi (Persian poet), II. 289, 332
Florus (Roman governor of Judea), II. 178
France, I. 258, 278, 299, 301, 323; the progress of France towards unity in mediaval times, 340–342; France in the time of the Reformation, 405, 410, 417; in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, 425–435; a French critic of the book of Genesis, 443
Francis of Assisi, was an example of the religious life to Raymond Lull, II. 353; the force of his teaching, 361, 362; a remarkable quotation from him, 362
Franciscan order, II. 350, 351, 362
Frankish monarchs, II. 258, 343
Frashacostra, friend of Zoroaster, I. 79, 82
Fravashi, the underlying reality, in the Zoroastrian religion, of any spiritual being, I. 89, 90, 93, 95, 109
Frederick Barbarossa (German emperor), II. 344
Frederick of Saxony, elector; a wise supporter and friend of Luther, II. 395–397, 404, 406
Frederick the Second of Prussia, II. 445
Fredericus arch. Salernitanus, II. 391
Froissart, n. 357
Frothingham, Mr, on our debt to Byzantium, II. 262
Froude, J. A., II. 412
Fust (one of the inventors of printing), II. 357
Gad (prophet), I. 261
Gaia (Greek deity), I. 137
Galb a (Roman emperor), II. 54, 55
Galen, eminent writer on medicine, I. 189
Galeros (Roman emperor), II. 201
Galilee, I. 288, 289, II. 14, 15, 32, 69, 70, 75, 78, 84, 88, 100, 101, 114, 126, 131, 138
Gallico, II. 417
Galilaeo (Roman emperor), II. 199, 200
Ganges (river), I. 27
Gaspar card. Contarenus, n. 391
Geber, Arabian chemist, II. 288
Geber (German critic), I. 88, 98
Genesis, book of, II. 42, 43; early chapters parabolic or legendary, 217, 218; a true substratum in the subsequent narratives, 224; in one point probably less exact than Exodus, 225; a mixture in it of general probability and legendary detail, 236, 237, 239; the compilation of the book, 347; the Gnostic interpretation of its first chapter, II. 188; the complexity of its sources, 443
Geneva, II. 410
Genseric, II. 220, 238, 239, 284
Gentiles, II. 153, 155–157, 159–168, 170
George, Duke of Saxony, II. 397
Gerbert, see Sylvester II (pope)
Gerizim, Mt, I. 305, 394
Germany, Germans, first converted to Christianity by the English monk Boniface, II. 259; German municipalities, 290; separated from France about 1000 A.D., 301 (see also 310, 313, 317, 222); Germany in feudal times, 343, 344; a mediaval German philosopher, 345; a German poet, 357; German burthers, 369; Germany in connexion with the Reformation, 389
INDEX

486

390, 396, 397, 399, 404–407, 409, 415, 417; German music, 423; Germany in connection with modern scepticism, 435–445

Gibbon, E. J. W., n. 332

Gibeonites, i. 262

Gideon, i. 210, 251, 252, 269, 299

Gilboa, i. 258

Giotto (painter), n. 356

Glad, n. 219

Gnostics, a sect of heretical thinkers, 135, 137, 140, 142. Quoted, 59, 61, 69, 71, 72, 98–101, 107, 108, 122, 123, 126, 141, 143

Gospels, (i) Matthew, not really written, in its present form, by the apostle Matthew, n. 14; yet possibly in part due to him, and very instructive in its arrangement of events, 29, 44; compared, as to its latter portion, with the gospel of Mark, so as to show the common origin of both gospels, 40–42; not however based on Mark, 42; has much in common with Luke, but the common elements very differently arranged, so that we cannot suppose a single common origin in this case, 44; not so old as the gospel of Mark, but contains a stratum older than any in Mark, 45; a remarkable passage, 100, 109, 125; the incident of washing the disciples' feet probably true, 121; genuine sayings and incidents reported in it, 124, 126. Quoted or referred to 7, 14, 86, 45, 69, 99, 100, 110, 113, 130, 132, 134, 137, 147

Gotha, dangerous to the Roman empire, n. 227; became Christian, though Arian, 238; converted to Christianity by Ulfilas, 242; their king Theodoric named, 255

Gottschalk, a persecuted monk, n. 301

Greece, the intellectual wise men of, Rome, i. 207

Graham, professor W., i. 27

Granada, n. 327

Grant, A. J. (History of Europe), n. 312

Great Britain, n. 416, 417, 425, 440, 446, 448, 450. (See England and Scotland)

Greece, the Greeks, distinguished from early times by clearness of intellect, by literary and artistic merit, but not equally by governing power, i. 136, 137; formed themselves into Hellenic unity (though not unity of government) probably before the ninth century
INDEX 487

B.C., under the operation of three causes, the Trojan war, the poems celebrating that war, and the Dorian strength, 145, 146; the Greek race expanded without much difficulty till the end of the sixth century B.C., but then began to feel the strain of the struggle for existence, 146, 147; their strength and their weakness at that date, 147-151; their history down to the third quarter of the fourth century B.C., 152-158; their inability to form themselves into a political unity, 158; hence subjugated by Philip of Macedon, 158; their growing achievements in science and philosophy, 189; the debt of the world to ancient Greece (Hellas), 189, 190; the empire of ancient Greece, 397; the vigorous efforts of the Greeks to reform their religion noted, 115, 147; Greeks aided the Latins against king Porsena, r. 196; influence of the Greeks on the Romans, 193, 206, 209, 210, 212; on the Jews, 355, 360, 388; on the Moors, 185, 188, 190; on Clement of Alexandria and Origen, 192; on the Moslem Arabs, 286, 288, 331; on the political condition of modern European states, 291; on Abaelard, 347; on the Schoolmen generally, 295, 300, 309, 313-321, 358, 373, 397; Gregory of Tours (bishop and historian), 250; Gregory (poet), 459; Gregory of Tours (bishop and historian), 250; Gregory V (pope), 311; Gregory VI (pope), 313; Gregory VII (pope), 357; Gregory V (pope), 311; Gregory VI (pope), 313; Gregory VII (pope), even more famous under the name of Hildebrand, r. 310, 311, 313-321, 358, 373, 397; Gregory of Tours (bishop and historian), 250; Grey, Sir Edward, 459; Grostete, Robert (bishop of Lincoln), 250; Guadalquivir (river), r. 287; Guizot (History of Civilisation in Europe translated by William Hazlitt), 341; Gutenberg (one of the inventors of printing), r. 357; Habakkuk (prophet), r. 305; Hadler, Greek deity, r. 137; Hadrian (Roman emperor), r. 178; Hale (poet), 332; Haggai (prophet), r. 338, 349-351, 370, 384; Hakam (Moorish monarch), r. 327; Hakam (Fatimite caliph), r. 321; Hallam’s Middle Ages, r. 322, 345, 348, 349, 351; Literature of Europe, r. 346; Hamza, uncle of Mohammed, r. 270; Handel, r. 423, 424; Hannah, r. 196, 203, 206; Hans Andersen, n. 421; Hanns Leaguie, n. 344; Harnack, p. 185, 240, 243, 244, 445; Harrison, Frederick, n. 261; Hart, J. H., r. 306; Harun Airaschid (caliph), n. 282, 288, 291; Hashim, family akin to Mohammed, r. 270; Headlam, J. W., n. 459; Headley, F. W., r. 24; Hearns, Lafadio, r. 77, 135; Heaven (in the religious sense of the word), in the Zoroastrian religion, r. 82, 108, 109; in the Chinese religion, 115, 122, 128; in Greek religion (according to Sophocles), 122; in the religion of Jesus, 247, 290, 407; in the Christian religion, r. 2, p. 6, 7, 24, 51, 52, 60, 75, 87, 92, 117-119, 125, 139, 172, 184, 377, 408; Hegel, r. xi, n. 440; Heine (poet), n. 468; Hejra (otherwise Hegira), Mohammed’s flight from Mecca to Medina, being the epoch from which Moslems date all succeeding years, p. 264, 271, 272; Hell (punishment after death, regarded as eternal when this word is used, unless the contrary be stated), in the Hindu religion, r. 49; in the Zoroastrian religion, 84; in the Greek religion, 152; in Roman religion, 205; in the Old Testament, 317, 402; in the Christian religion, p. 24, 120, 172, 173, 182-184, 197, 207, 208, 230, 269, 315, 424; in Islam, r. 272; Hellas, Helennes, in Homer apparently a small tract of land, a small people, r. 138; through the strength of the Dorians these names were extended over the whole country now called Greece, 141-143. (See also n. 341; also Greeks, the Greeks) Helmholtz, his view respecting the origin, and possible decay, of the solar and stellar light and heat, r. 2, 9-15; Helvetius, r. 427; Henry I (king of England), p. 335; Henry III (king of England), p. 341; Henry V (king of England), p. 338, 340; Henry VIII (king of England), p. 410; Henry IV (king of France), p. 415; Henry IV (emperor of Germany), p. 316-319; Hephaestus (Greek deity), r. 138; Herculeum (Graecost), r. 47, 187; Herculius (Greek philosopher), r. 147, 148, 163; Herculius (Byzantine emperor), n. 320; Heresy, heretics in the Zoroastrian religion, r. 107; in the Christian religion, p. 171, 190, 249, 258, 260, 301, 302, 303, 395; Horod, king of Judæa, r. 403; Horod Antipas, n. 69, 72, 97, 104, 125
Herodotus, describes the Magi, I. 90; and the Persian religion generally, 94; on Phœnicians, 97; on a question put by Cambyses, 101; on the death of Cambyses, 102; on the burial of their dead by the Persians, contrary to the Magian precept, 105; his ignorance of Zoroaster, 110; says that the Dorians first inhabited the country south of Thessaly, I. 142; that the Athenians were originally Pelasgians, 105; says that the Dorians first inhabited the country south of Horeb, Mt, I. 272, 274. (See Sinai)

Hesiod (poet), I. 215

Hindoo Coosh Mts, I. 287

Hipparchus (astronomer), I. 189

Hipparchus (tyrant), I. 153

Hippipatia (teacher), I. 173

Hippipatia (tyrant), I. 153-155

Hippolytus, Christian Father, I. 196

Hirsi, Mt, II. 267

History, compared and contrasted with physical science, being inferior in range, superior in emotional power, I. 1; a vindication of history, as a theme admitting of endless expansion in time, occupies a great part of chapter I.

Hititites, I. 217, 247

Hodgson, F. C., II. 299

Holland, I. 416, 417

Homer, calls men "articulate-speaking," I. 15; his religion crudely picturesque, 138; his poetry important as an influence in promoting the unity of Hellas or Greece, 139; abounds in right feeling but not in distinct moral principle, 140; implies that the Achæans called themselves Hellenes, 142; describes women as possessing a certain freedom, 149; regards sin as a reality but assumes that it cannot be resisted, 151; the crude morality of Homer not without some parallel in Israelite history, 267

Homo-ousios (= Consubstantial), II. 215, 218, 222, 223, 229, 230, 234

Hooker, Richard, II. 413, 448

Hopkins, Dr, I. 49

Horace (poet), I. 215

Horeb, Mt, I. 272, 274. (See Sinai)

Hossain, grandson of Mohammed, II. 279

Hoses (prophet), I. 276-279, II. 75, 97

Hovhannes, see Humor, of the Mongols, II. 283

Hugo, Victor, II. 435

Huguenots, II. 415

Hullah (prophets), I. 298, 302

Humayun (Mogul emperor), II. 329, 330

Humboldt, Sir Henry, I. 335, 348

Hume, II. 339, 426, 446

Huns, II. 238

Huss, John, his principles, his career, and his martyrdom, sketched, I. 37, 38, 39-49, 56, 58, 63; by Egyptian monks, II. 236

Huygens, see Sheperd Kings

Ibn-Baithar, of Malaga, botanist, II. 287

Ibn Baitahir, Malaga, botanist, II. 287

Ibn al Asthik, Moslem historian, II. 284, 285

Idol, idolator, idolatry (in Greece and Rome idolatry is not specifically mentioned in these volumes, though implied), in Babylonia and Egypt, I. 32, 33; in India, 44; in the Aryan religion when dominant in Persia (Iran), 94; but largely overthrown there by the Magi, 94, 97; and overthrown by Cambyses in Egypt, 101; yet partly reinstated in Persia by the Magi in their degenerate days, 107; practised by Abraham in his early years, but afterwards given up by him, 225; repressed by Jacob, 229; forbidden by Moses, 243, yet practised among the Israelites, 220, 221, 243, 248, 269, 293, 294, 296, 298, 305, 307, 312, 321, 322, 333, 384; practised in Nineveh, 304, and in Babylon, 316, 321; in Arabia, before the rise of Islam, II. 263; overthrown by Mohammed, 273, 274; yet something of it continued afterwards, 279

Ishmael, I. 394, 403. (See Edom, Edomites)

Ignatius of Antioch, Christian martyr and writer, I. 46, 181, 182, 186
INDEX

Ignatius Loyola, founder of the Society of Jesus, ii. 410, 411
Immamuel, see Isaiah
Immortality (or eternal life), i. 8, 13, 56, 84, 109, 179-182, 326-328, 399, 402, ii. 1, 8, 112, 113, 121, 129, 172, 175, 176, 191, 195, 359, 390, 454, 484; immortality of the lower animals, ii. 449
Incarnation, doctrine of, ii. 5-7, 36, 212, 245-248
India, generally referred to, i. 34-77, ii. 326
Indra, Hindu deity, i. 38, 44
Indulgences, ii. 385-395, 398, 403
Indus river, i. 37, ii. 287
Innocent III (pope), ii. 334, 336, 364, 366
Ionian races, i. 143-145, 154, 155
Isaiah, disparages sacrifices, i. 277; not the expulsion of the Shepherd kings, ii. 267-270; in the divided kingdom, the “fear of God” powerful, 270; Jezebel, the Sidonian wife of king Ahab, tried to make the worship of Baal universal, 287-288; his prophecy against Sennacherib, 293; the “fear of God” in Isaiah contrasted with the “fear of God” in Deuteronomy, 301, 302. (See also ii. 108) (For the writer of the last twenty-seven chapters of the “book of Isaiah” see Prophet of the Exile, the) Ischyras, ii. 232 and x (corrigenda)
Ismael, Ishmaelites, i. 227, ii. 263, 273
Islam, the religion of “resignation to God’s will,” preached by Mohammed, i. viii; the early history of it, ii. 262-278 (see Mohammed); the spread of it, mainly by warlike conquest, after the death of Mohammed, 278-282; the calamities which the Moslems suffered in the thirteenth century from the Mongol invasion, 283-286; the progress of the Moslem Arabs in science, &c., before that invasion, 286-288; the intrinsic weakness of Moslems in the matter of government, 296-297; yet they were victorious in the crusades, 320-324; Islam triumphed in Constantiopole, 325, but was defeated in Russia, 326; Islam lost Spain, 327, but won northern India, 328; the defects of Islam as compared with Christianity, 330, 331; but some notice of its merits, 332, 333
Israel, Israelites, contrasted with the Hindus, i. 45, compared with the Athenians, 102; their sojourn in Egypt a true fact, 231; their clan, at the time of their entrance into Egypt, numbered a thousand persons or more, 232; their bondage in Egypt, after the expulsion of the Shepherd kings, their protectors, 233; all through this bondage their leaders retained the sense of a great destiny reserved for them by God, 234; the accounts which Manetho gives of their Exodus from Egypt a travesty of the real fact, but with some true particulars in it, 235, 237, 238, 240; in the Exodus they were joined by other races, 238; they must, at the time of the Exodus, have been numbered by the hundred thousand, 239; the Exodus under Moses a warlike deliverance, 240; the desert-wanderings, when the Biblical account is scrutinised, cannot be supposed to have occupied more than three years, 240, 241; their general courage, 244; the earthly ideal of the race, the conquest and possession of Canaan, gradually attained and at last completed under David, 246-284; the fall of this earthly ideal and the division of Israel into two kingdoms, 247-270; in the divided kingdom, the branch of the ten tribes was frail through the continual change of the ruling dynasty, 267, though apparently the more powerful, 270; Jezebel, the Sidonian wife of king Ahab, tried to make the worship of Baal universal throughout the ten tribes, one of great magnificence, 271; but was defeated by the efforts of the prophets Elijah and Eliahu, 271-276, the latter prophet acting through Jenu, who made himself king, 276; the ten tribes in alliance with Syria against Assyria, 278, are defeated by Assyria, 287, and at last this kingdom was destroyed, and many of its people swept away, by the Assyrian kings, 289; the whole nation blessed.
INDEX

by Isaiah, 291. Israel an ideal conception, not limited in any precise manner, in Ezekiel, 311; in the prophet of the exile, 319, 320, 323, 331; in the Psalms, 340; in the general Jewish conception, 404; but in Zechariah “Israel” is equivalent to the ten tribes, 358; in the New Testament sometimes used as equivalent to the Jews (and in this sense the exaltation of Israel is ardently desired by the Jews), but generally with something ideal in the acceptance of the term, I. 19, 58, 60, 90, 114, 143, 145, 151, 162, 163, 165, 169, 206, 381. (For the tribe of Judah, see Judah)

Italy, under the ancient Romans, I. 210, 212, in mediaeval times, II. 228, 229, 256, 299, 317, 343-346; in modern times, 435

Ivan III, Tsar of Russia, II. 326

Jacob, ignorant of writing, I. 224; the picturesqueness of the stories relating to him, 229; a great and venerable person, 230; the first of the patriarchs to repress idolatry among his followers, 230; his migration, with his sons and his clan, down into Egypt, 229; his name a synonym for the people of Israel, 320, 323

Jacobus card. Sadoletus, n. 391

Jaddua, Jewish high priest, I. 382, 383, 385; referred to though not named, 363

Jairus, II. 30

James, apostle, son of Alphaeus, n. 79, 136, ruling in Judah, known to Zechariah, 307, n. 95

James, apostle, son of Zebedee, his call to be an apostle, 79; his presence at the Transfiguration, 99; his probable sentiment towards the Jewish ceremonial law, 151; his martyrdom, 154; rebuked by Jesus Christ when he wished to call down fire from heaven on the inhospitable Samaritans, 268.

James, “the Lord’s brother,” not one of the twelve, I. 196; accompanied Jesus on his last journey to Jerusalem, 102; a son of Mary, 134-135; a distinguished Christian leader, 193; author of the epistle contained in the New Testament, 27, 156; peculiarly hopeful of the salvation of his own nation, but possibly somewhat narrow in his conduct towards the Gentiles, 156; even the Jews considered his martyrdom a sin in those who slew him, 157; when he died, the cause of Jewish Christianity was greatly weakened, 164; his permanent residence had been in Jerusalem, 165; in the Clementine Homilies affirmed to be bishop of bishops, and ruler of the churches everywhere, 308

Jansenists, II. 422, 431

Janus (Roman deity), n. 193

Japan, I. 111, 135, II. 425

Javan (Greece) I. 355

Jeanne d’Arc, the inspired deliverer of France, IV. 342, 372

Jedidiah, a name confered on Solomon, II. 284

Jobusites, n. 258

Jehoiachin (king of Judah), I. 309, 311

Jehoiakim (king of Judah), I. 309

Jehoshaphat (king of Judah), I. 221, 229, 256, 299, 317, 343-346

Jeremiah, probably believed in the miracles of the Exodus, but his trust in God is independent of them, I. 296; praises king Josiah, 303; but nowhere speaks of Josiah’s religious reform, 307; this silence accounted for, 307, 308; predicts the captivity, 306, and also the return from the captivity, 310; not the author of the “Lamentations,” 313; his regard for others outside his nation, 315; his friends, 315; his prophecy of a “righteous Branch” ruling in Judah, known to Zechariah, 352, n. 95

Jericho, II. 107, 108

Jeroboam, son of Nebat, rebel against the line of David, and first king of the ten tribes, I. 267; probably did not intend idolatry in setting up the golden calves at Dan and Bethel, 268, 299; yet lightminded and arbitrary in his religious measures, 269, 270

J eroboam II (king), I. 267

J erome quotes the gospel of the Hebrews, II. 3; translator of the Bible into Latin, 243

Jerome of Prague, I. 373, 377

Jerusalem, I. 157, 221; said by Manetho to have been founded by the Shepherd kings after they left Egypt, 237; a stronghold of the Jebusites, captured by David and Joab, 258; the temple built there, 259, 265 (see also 268, 274, 282); saved from the army of Nechoherib, 280, 299; the temple in reign of Manasseh, 293; purifed by Josiah, 298, 299; idolatrous again after Josiah’s death, 305; besieged by Nebuchadnez- zar, 309; the extraordinary variety of hopes, fears, and prophecies, attending... that siege, and the capture and destruction of the city, 305–314 (see also 110); the restoration of it predicted by Jeremiah, 310, by Ezekiel, 315, by the prophet of the exiles, 316–318, 320, 322, 324, 325; the actual return to Jerusalem, 350, 352–353; the subsequent history, 333 sqq.; the large return of exiles under Zerubbabel in the reign of Darius Nothus, 349; the return of Ezra, 359; of Nehemiah,
361 sqq.; a Greek gymnasium there,
388; attacked and taken by Antiochus
Epiphanes, 390; recovered by Judas
Maccabaeus, 392; captured by the Romans under Pompey, 403; scribes from Jerusalem come and vilify Jesus in Galilee, and are rebuked, n. 80; whichydrone of it, and the divine sequel to Jesus Christ from our ordinary humanity (9, 10), that the resurrection was a true fact in a region beyond our senses, but not a miraculous fact in the world of sense (14, 26, 27) and that the evidence is very much too weak to make other miracles credible, though some are founded on true facts (27–30), and that for moral reasons it is not desirable that the miracles should be true, 35; hence that the view of the Nicene creed is not tenable, 35; and that the somewhat different grounds of the apostle Paul, which tend to support that creed, are also inadequate, 36, 168, 169; a mysterious divine origin, affirmed by Jesus Christ of himself, is also affirmed by him of
to whom he speaks, 37; the to Jerome, 350, 352–353; the subsequent history, 333 sqq.; the large return of exiles under Zerubbabel in the reign of Darius Nothus, 349; the return of Ezra, 359; of Nehemiah,
361 sqq.; a Greek gymnasium there,
388; attacked and taken by Antiochus
Epiphanes, 390; recovered by Judas
Maccabaeus, 392; captured by the Romans under Pompey, 403; scribes
from Jerusalem come and vilify Jesus in Galilee, and are rebuked, n. 80; whichydrone of it, and the divine sequel
to Jesus Christ from our ordinary humanity (9, 10), that the resurrection was a true fact in a region beyond our senses, but not a miraculous fact in the world of sense (14, 26, 27) and that the evidence is very much too weak to make other miracles credible, though some are founded on true facts (27–30), and that for moral reasons it is not desirable that the miracles should be true, 35; hence that the
view of the Nicene creed is not tenable, 35; and that the somewhat different grounds of the apostle Paul, which tend to support that creed, are also inadequate, 36, 168, 169; a mysterious divine origin, affirmed by Jesus Christ of himself, is also affirmed by him of
to whom he speaks, 37; the

INDEX

from being a disciple, 105, 106; reflections on this incident, 106, 107; lodges at Jericho with Zacchaeus, 107; incident of blind Bartimeus, 108; enters triumphantly Jerusalem and the temple, 108; an account of his proceedings there, reflections on them, with particular reference to the fourth gospel, 109-114; his discourse to his disciples about the last things, 115-120; the full discourse in the fourth gospel, 120, 121; his anointing by a woman, 121; his last supper, 121, 122; the garden of Gethsemane, 123; his apprehension and trial, 124, 125; his crucifixion, and the sayings attributed to him on the cross, 126; his burial, 126; in which we become immortal, and God and man are reconciled, 127, 128. (The succeeding reference to Jesus Christ in volume II are too numerous to be referred to in every case; but see especially 245-249, 320, and 453-456)

Jesus, brother of high priest John or Johanan, i. 364

Jesus, Society of, see Jesuits

Jesus, son of Josedek, i. 372. (See Joshua)

Jethro, i. 234

Jezreel, I. 275, 276

Jewish authorities or hierarchy, ii. 33, 34, 78, 91, 109, 114, 125, 140, 150-153, 155-157, 160, 382

Jewish Christians, ii. 22; not wrong at first to hold by the Pentateuchal law, 156; yet those of them who broke through it did a great work, 157, 158; those who continued to maintain the intrinsic superiority of Jews to Gentiles were resolutely opposed by Paul, 161; Peter, who at first held this view, gradually came over to the side of Paul, 163-166; Jewish-Christian writings, 306-309

Jews, the title appropriate after the return from the captivity, i. 319; the question of the time occupied in that return referred to, 320, 329; the long history of the return described in chapter xiv, with a brief reference to the after history down to the end of the third century B.C.; the second and first centuries B.C. dealt with in chapter xv (see also ix, and ii. 35, 43, 59, 101); the contingent attitude of the apostles to the Jews, 146, 147, 150, 151; the belief in miracles was the reason why the Jewish hierarchy and most of the nation rejected Christianity, 153, 157; yet the Jews who accepted it were very numerous, 155, 156; the strong opposition of the Jews to Paul and to the disciples generally after Stephen's death, 159, 160; Paul not quite just to the Jews, though desiring to be so, 167-170; the injustice of the Roman governors in Judaea a cause of the Jewish rebellion, which was put down by Titus, 178; a comparison of the way in which Jews and Christians respectively opposed the Roman tyranny, 178, 179; Jews remained within the bounds of the Roman empire after it became Christian, because they knew not where to find safety, 249; Mohammed had more to do with Jews than with Christians, 263; but could not conciliate them, 273; honoured them at first, but treated them with severity afterwards, 275, 276; considered them hostile, 279; Jews were one of the sources of the free spirit in modern nations, 291, 292; massacre of Jews in the second crusade (though Bernard of Clairvaux defended them), 322; expelled from England by Edward I, 338; a remark on the unworthiness of the leaders of the Jewish nation at the time of the Christian era, 382; Lessing's fable in relation to the three religions, Judaism, Christianity, Islam, 436, 437. (See also Judah, tribe and kingdom of)

Jezabel, i. 270-275

Jezreel, i. 275, 276

Jingis Khan (otherwise Zingis Khan, ii. 283; Chengiz, 286), t. 7, ii. 283-285, 324, 325

Joab, i. 258, 259

Joan Boucher, ii. 413

Joanes Potro card. Thestinius, ii. 391

Joannes Matthaeus episcopus Veromensis, ii. 391

Joash (king of Israel), i. 269

Joel (prophet), t. 139

Johanan or Jehohanan (the same as that Johanan), ii. 364, 365, 379, 381, 382

Johannes Leo Africanus (Arab geographer), ii. 257

John (high priest), t. 364. (See Johanan)

John (king of England), ii. 334-336

John XXIII (pope), ii. 374-376

John the Baptist, i. 407, ii. 10, 12, 30, 31, 34, 41, 44, 49; a general account of his preaching, 58-61; his relation to Jesus, especially in regard to the baptism, 62-64; his imprisonment, 69; the message he sent to Jesus, 82, 83; the praise of him by Jesus, 83; his death, 81, 88, 89. (See also 95, 162)

John the Evangelist, ii. 8; the primary, though not the sole, author of the fourth gospel, 13; author of the Revelation, 13; his character sketched, 13; the evidence as to his authorship of the works attributed to him, Appendix to chapter xvi throughout; he is half prophet, half poet, 51; the date of his banishment to Patmos, 55; a sensitive soul, 56; his call to be a disciple, 75; his call to be an apostle, 70; his presence at the transfiguration, 99; his own character appears in the discourses which he professes to report in the fourth gospel, 113; present at the discourse given by Jesus on the Mount of Olives shortly before the crucifixion, 113; present in the garden of Gethsemane, 123; stood by the cross of Jesus, 126; the Ephesian Christians in after times loved to exalt him, 133; he saw dreams and visions, 140; his memories of Jesus mingled with imagination, 175; the extraordinary force of style which he sometimes reaches by the most simple language, 175, 176; the excessive vehemence of his character, 176; his practice of wearing (no doubt in religious services) the plate of gold which was assigned in the book of Exodus to the high priest, 176; his mode of celebrating the passover different from that which was customary, and the reason of his so celebrating it, 176, 177; a story told about him by Clement of Alexandria, 177, 178; his statement of the doctrine of the Incarnation, 245 (see also Gospel of John, under heading John); with hesitation, 300; rebuked by Jesus Christ when he wished to call down fire from heaven on the inhospitable Samaritans, 308. The incidents, Mark ix. 38-41, and Mark x. 35-45, are not mentioned in this treatise
INDEX 493

John the Presbyter, ii. 47
John Ball, ii. 338, 339
John Erigena, ii. 302, 347
John of Gaunt, n. 229
John Hyrcanus, see Maccabees

Johnson, Dr. ii. 446
Josia (Jewish high priest), i. 383, 384, 385
Josakim (Jewish high priest), i. 382
Josiah (prophet), i. 277, ii. 89
Jonas (reformer), ii. 408
Jonathan (son of Saul), i. 254, 255
Jonathan (otherwise Johanan, high priest), i. 382
Joram or Jehoram (king of Israel), i. 275, ii. 292
Joseph, ii. 218, 220; favourite son of Jacob, 229; his romantic story referred to, 230; the agreement which he is represented to have made between Pharaoh and the Egyptians as regards the land hardly to be approved of, 230; yet a man of great ability and worth, 230; his death in Egypt, 232; probably the subject of national songs, 232; Joseph of Arimathaea, ii. 127, 134, 140

Josephus, dwells, in his Antiquities, on the military aspect of the character of Moses, i. 235; whether he believed in the miracles of the Exodus, is doubtful, 236; quotes the history of the Exodus from Manetho, 237, 238, 240; an authority on part of the history after Zerubbabel, 348, 357; uncritical in his treatment of ancient records, 362, 363; yet gives some trustworthy information not to be found elsewhere, 363-366; which, however, has to be given up by those who think Zerubbabel contemporary with Cyrus, 383; our sole authority for Jewish history in the third century B.C., 385; charges the Samaritans with recreancy, 390; describes to us the later Jewish sects (Sadducees, Essenes, Pharisees), 406

Joseph, II (brother of James), ii. 135, 136
Joshua, i. 210, 248, 284
Joshua (high priest), see Joshua
Joshua, book of, i. 222, 247

Josiah (king), the reform of religion in his reign, 230, 221, 294-300, 302; the gallant but imprudent act by which he met his death, 303, 396; the praise of him by Jeremiah, 307; his reform undone afterwards, 307, 308. (See also 389 and ii. 306, 444)

Jowett, Benjamin, i. 161, 163, 175, 182

Judah, tribe and kingdom of, a rival to Ephraim, i. 250; accepts David as king, 256; the jealousy of the other tribes, when David had become king over all Israel, excited against Judah, 259; the tribe of Judah fascinated by the memory of David, 256; the Biblical historians were of this tribe, 259; a king of Judah, after the division of the kingdom, appears in alliance with a king of the ten tribes, 270; the prophets of Judah sowed the true seed of a future development of the world, 274, 275, 277, 278; the kingdom of Judah doubtful whether to join the alliance of Syria and Israel against Assyria, but does not do so, 281-284, 286, 287; assailed by Sennacherib, and delivered after serious losses, 290-291, 293; the religious temperament of the people of Judah in the reign of Josiah described, 295, 296; the reform of religion in that reign, 299; the exultation of the people of Judah at the fall of Nineveh, 304; Judah, after the death of Josiah, tyrannised over by Egypt, relapsed into idolatry, 305-307; Judah overcome and carried into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar, 309; prophecies of a restoration of Judah, 310; of the reconciliation of Judah and Ephraim, 312, 354, 355, 357; the reconciliation frustrated, 358; briefly mentioned, 321, 345, 360, 399,

© in this web service Cambridge University Press www.cambridge.org
INDEX

390: "The Lion of the tribe of Judah," n. 52; (See also Jews, Judaea.)
Judas (Isæariœ), n. 79, 122, 124-126, 142.
Judas (Maccæus), see Maccæus.
Judæ (apostle, and author of epistle), n. 27, 79.
Judges, book of, i. 242, 247-249.
Judith, book of, i. 345, 367.
Julius I (pope), n. 294.
Julius II (pope), n. 396.
Julius Caesar, see Caesar.
Juno (Roman deity), I. 193.
Jupiter, the highest deity in the religion of ancient Rome, nobly entitled Jupiter Optimus Maximus, i. 192, n. 206.
Justin Martyr, n. 46, 47, 56, 186.
Justinian (emperor), n. 197, 251, 252, 346.
Juvenal, I. 214.
Kabba, temple at Mecca, containing 360 idols, n. 265; visited by Mohammed and 2000 followers peacefully, 273; the idols demolished the succeeding year, 274.
Kant, the beginner of a new spirit in philosophy, i. x; the originator of the nebular hypothesis, 9; a further characterisation of him, n. 440, 441.
Kapławatthu, birthplace of Buddha, n. 59.
Keble, n. 446; referred to on page 70 but not named.
Kepler (astronomer), n. 417.
Khaḍḍiga (wife of Mohammed), n. 265-267, 270, 277.
Khâma (Buddhist monk), n. 72.
Khubilai (or Kubla) Khan, I. 135, n. 283.
Kidd's Documents Illustrative of the Continental Reformation, II. 389-392.
Kings, books of, i. 222, 259; frequently afterwards; for the time of their composition, i. 347; (See also n. 242.)
Knox, n. 413.
Korah, sons of, supposed to have written some of the psalms, i. 386.
Koreish, the clan to which Mohammed belonged, n. 265; hostile to him, 269-271; his peaceable agreement with them, 273; incidents of his war with them, 274-276.
Koster, one of the inventors of printing, n. 357.
Köstlin's Life of Luther, n. 397, 407.
Kretzschmer, Frâulein, n. 329.
Krishna, Hindu deity, n. 55.
Kahatirya, see Caste.
Kundu, disciple of Buddha, n. 74.
Kwâng-Tâze, follower of Lâo-tze, i. 124, 131, 133.
Lacordaire, n. 435.
Lamarck, n. 18, 20.
Lamennais, n. 435, 436.
Lamentations, book of, i. 313.
Lane-Poole, Stanley, n. 290, 327.
Langland, William, author of Piers the Ploughman, n. 340.
Langton, Stephen, archbishop and cardinal, the chief promoter of Magna Charta, n. 355, 359.
Languedoc, n. 364, 366, 443.
Lanquiniais (French author), n. 428.
Lâo-tze, Chinese philosopher, born 604 b.c., not so famous as Confucius, but more original, i. 120; his system, called the Tao, dwells upon the impalpable nature of creative or original power, 121; quotations illustrative of this, 121-123; one of his maxims was "recompense injury with kindness," 123; his death much lamented by his followers, 124; his defect was the undermining of active energy, 125; his interview with Confucius described, 125; an interview of a follower of his with Confucius described, 132. (See also n. 47.)
Laplace (astronomer), n. 10, 13.
Lares, Roman deities, n. 192.
Las Navas, battle in Spain, 1212 A.D., in which the Moors were defeated, n. 327.
Lecky, W. E. H., n. 430.
Legatto, Dr. i. 113, 119, 121, 125, 128, 133.
Legnano, battle of, n. 344.
Leibnitz, n. 417.
Leo I (pope), n. 220, 236, 240.
Leo III (pope), n. 280, 295.
Leo X (pope), n. 394, 396, 397.
Leo the Isaurian (Byzantine emperor), n. 290.
Leonidas (Spartan king), n. 157.
Leontides (Christian martyr), n. 199.
Lepanto, battle of, n. 345.
Lesing, n. 430.
Lever (apparently=the apostle Matthew), n. 43, 79.
Leviticus, book of, i. 238; has a passage recognising human sacrifices as lawful, 249; the greater part of the book (but the passage just referred to is an exception) written after the Bebianian captivity, n. 444.
Licinius (Roman emperor), n. 201.
Life, mysterious, i. 4; the problems connected with, 8; it may possibly be existent in sun and stars, and a cause

© in this web service Cambridge University Press www.cambridge.org
of the energy inherent in those bodies, 13; a divine purpose manifested in the development of life, 27, and not absent in the development of beings outside man, 28; the death of Jesus a source of eternal life, 27, 454; terrestrial life originally derived from the moon, and gradually passed away life which is in the sun; the relation of this fact to the Christian doctrine of a Fall, 462–464. (See also i. ix, x, xiii, xiv)

Linpen, window, when first manufactured, 357

Linguet (French author), n. 427, 428

Lisseh, Chinese prime minister, i. 130

Livy, i. 191, 195, 199–202, 215

Locke, ii. 417, 449

Lodge, Sir Oliver, i. xiii, xiv

Lollards, n. 338, 339, 410

Lombards, ii. 257, 259; Lombard cities, ii. 344

Longinus, Neoplatonic philosopher, critic, and statesman, i. 196

Lord's Supper, the, ii. 121, 122, 143, 384, 386, 387

Lot, Abraham's nephew, i. 227

Louis IX (king of France), ii. 320, 323

(Compare "Gospels" and "Acts")

Lupus (bishop of Troyes), ii. 220

Luther, Martin, leader of the movement which we call the Reformation, ii. 578; his view as to the divine maintenance of the Church, 385; the objection which he raised to the indulgences of a twofold character, first, to the indulgences in themselves, secondly, to the sale of them, 385–388; a history of the controversy, showing that the church of Rome did in the end give up the sale of indulgences, though not the indulgences themselves, 389–393; but before the church of Rome gave up the sale of indulgences, Luther had been cast out of the church; the history of this, 394–397; Luther's protest against the burning of heretics (though he sanctioned persecution of a minor kind), 398; his doctrine of Justification by Faith, 399–401, 420; a general account of his career after his breach with the church of Rome, his merits and his faults, 402–409; the relation in which Calvin stood to pose their religion on the Persians, 104, 105; their subjugation by Darins and the Persians, 102, 103; their exposure of the Medes to be eaten by birds, 105; they readmit "Avesta,"

Lyons, martyrs of, n. 197

Lyssander (Spartan admiral), i. 157

Mabry (French author), ii. 427, 428

Macaulay, Lord, n. 430

Maccabees (the family), Mattathias, the father, i. 390–392; Judas, the third son (particularly called Maccabeus), 392 sqq.; Eleazar, the fourth son, 392; John, the eldest son, 392; Jonathan, the youngest son, 392, 393; Simon, the second son, 393; John Hyrcanus (son of Simon), 393, 394, 408; the family are also called Asmonaeans, and gradually passed away in the first century before Christ, 403. (See also ii. 59, 292)

Index
survives in purified form with the Parsee, 108. (See also ii. 58)
 Magna Charta, ii. 354-357
 Magnesia, ii. 181
 Magyars, n. 298, 343
 Mahi-shalal-hash-baz, r. 283-286
 Mahmud of Ghazni, Moslem invader of India, n. 328
 Majorca, n. 351, 353, 354
 Malachi (prophet), n. 92
 Malek Ib n Ans, Mohammedan doctor,
 n. 281
 Malpighi (biologist), n. 417
 Memel, n. 324
 Mammam, r. 2, 29
 Manasseh (king of Judah), r. 220, 293-296, 301
 Manasses (the Jewish son-in-law of Sanballat), r. 365, 366
 Manda, a wild tribe of central Asia, called Scythians by the Greeks, who destroyed Nineveh, r. 99, 100, 303 Manetho, see Josephus
 Manicheanism, n. 388
 Manzoni (novelist), n. 435
 Marcus Aurelius, Roman emperor and Stoic philosopher, r. 4, 214; ii. 337
 Mark, mentioned in the first epistle of Peter, n. 165. (For his gospel, see "Gospels")
 Mars (Roman deity), r. 193
 Marseilles, r. 145
 Martinez, James, n. 447, 448
 Marxists (Hindu deities), r. 38
 Mary (mother of Jesus), not, at first, a believer in the divine mission of her son, r. 91; but afterwards she was so, 102; stood by his cross, and the evidence must lead us to think that she visited the tomb, 134-139; the first indication noted of the transcendental glory afterwards assigned to her, 139.
(See also 330, 357)
 Mary Magdalene, n. 72, 134, 135, 137, 139
 Matilda (countess), n. 317
 Mattathias, see Maccabees Matthew, apostle, ii. 79. (See also 29, 39; and compare "Gospels")
 Matthew (or Matthias) of Janow, n.
 373
 Maurice de Saxo, n. 428
 Maurice, F. D., n. 467
 Maximian (Roman emperor), n. 201
 Maximus (Roman emperor), n. 236
 Mayor, professor Joseph, n. 136
 Mazinni, n. 435
 Mecoco, r. 285, 286, 289-271, 273-275
 Media, Median empire, r. 90-97, 99-103, 289
 Medina, originally called Yathrib, n.
 270-276
 Meleagthson, n. 401, 406
 Melites (schismatics), n. 231
 Melek Shah (Seljuk sultan), n. 290
 Menander (Gnostic), n. 185-187
 Mercibael, the true name of Mephiboseth, r. 251
 Merz, Dr. T., i. 20, n. 441
 Mesbach, r. 403
 Messiah, r. 401, 404, n. 108, 112, 155;
 for the oratorio the Messiah, n. 425, 424
 Mesne of Maridin, Arab physician, n.
 287
 Metaphysics, i. x, xi
 Mexico, n. 416
 Meyer, professor Eduard, n. 98, 353, 356
 Miall, L. C., author of Early Naturalists,
n. 347
 Mibah (prophet), r. 249, 277, 279
 Michael Angelo, ii. 359
 Midianites, r. 227, 234, 242, 247
 Milan, edict of, n. 201, 226
 Milinda, Buddhist king of Greek origin,
r. 76
 Mills, reforming preacher at Prague,
n. 373
 Mill, James, n. 448
 Mill, John Stuart, n. 448
 Mill's, professor, r. 79-81, 83-85
 Milman's History of Latin Christianity,
n. 311, 361
 Militia, n. 157
 Milton, r. 158, 172; ii. 5, 6, 413, 417
 Mineva (Roman deity), r. 193
 Miracles, r. i, xii, xiii; the Old Testa-moment miracles briefly discussed, and their strongest support, the book of Deuteronomy, shown to be inadequate, because written (or begun to be written) in the reign of Josiah, 216-223; the miracles of the Exodus really a disparagement to Moses, 234, 235; the miracles of Elijah are not recorded either in a contemporary, or in a consistent, narrative, 272, 273; the destruction of Sonnacherib's army due to pestilence, 289; the rigidity of the later Jews a consequence of their belief in miracles, 387, 388; the prophecies in the book of Daniel discussed, and the miracles touched on, 396-403; the gospel miracles considered as a support of the doctrine which separates the original nature of Jesus Christ from the original nature of every other man, n. 8; the miracles of healing, which have a measure of truth in them, do not support this doctrine, 9, 10; of the other miracles, that which occupies the crucial position is the physical resurrection of Jesus, 11, 12; the resurrection is shown, both by the inconsistency of the gospel narratives relating to it, by the account of the conversion of Paul in the Acts, and by various expressions in the epistles of Peter and Paul, to have been an event occurring in the spiritual supersensuous sphere, not in the visible world, 14-18; some further elucidation of this topic, continued through the rest of chapter xvi; the question as to the cause of the disappearance of the body of Jesus from the tomb touched on, 134; the unfavourable and misleading effect which the belief in miracles has had on our estimate of Simon Peter, 154; the reason why the Jewish authorities rejected Jesus lay in their belief in miracles, 153, 157; the belief in miracles hindered critical inquiry in the early Church, because it tended to make the whole subject of religion appear outside human knowledge, 207; doubt in miracles began in England, but extended with far greater vehemence to France, 425; and, with more careful criticism, to Germany, 446

Miriam, t. 244
Mithra, Mithraism, t. 90-93, tt. 200, 206
Mitra (Hindu deity), t. 38
Moabites, t. 227, 244, 247, 255, 258, 259, 260, 309, 339, 341, 359, 361
Mohammed, general remarks on his religion and on his personality, t. 263, 264; born in the year 570 A.D. at Mecca, and in his twenty-fifth year married a wealthy lady of the Koreish clan, Khadija, whose agent he had been, 265; in his fortieth year, at a time when he was greatly dissatisfied with the idolatrous religion of his countrymen, a conflict arose in his soul, and he heard a voice bidding him "cry in the name of the Lord!" 266; he feared that he was possessed, but his wife encouraged him, 266, 267; he began to preach in Mecca, and made some converts, but was met with much derision, 269; his uncle, Abû Tâlib, though not a convert of his, yet supported him, 270; he and his followers were subjected to great privations, 270, till at last he escaped with them to Medina, 271, an event called the Hejra (see Hejra); both his wife and his uncle had died before this took place, 270; a certain fault in his preaching is noted, 272, yet his extraordinary abilities in governing is noted as well, 273; he destroys the idols in and around Mecca, and wins the submission of many Arabian tribes, 274; some of his acts cannot be approved of, yet his character must be accounted lofty and heroic, 275-277; after the death of Khadija, he adopted the polygamy which was customary in his nation, 277; the most signal difference between the teaching of Mohammed and the teaching of Jesus Christ is noted, 277, 278; his religion warlike, yet warlike rather through circumstances than on principle, 277, 278; the military successes of his followers after his death, 278; he acknowledges the humility of Christians, 279

Mohammed II (sultan), conqueror of Constantinople, tt. 325
Molière, t. 41
Monasteries, t. 207-209
Monastic orders, see Monks
Montesquieu, t. 427
Montalembert, t. 294
Montealembert, tt. 252-255, 435
Montesquieu, t. 427
Montsela, t. 234
Morley, Lord, tt. 430
Moscow, tt. 326
Moses, indebted, in some respects, to Egypt, t. 34; not the author of the book of Deuteronomy, 221-223; did not originally circumcise his own children, 233; his part in the deliverance of the Israelites insignificant if we believe the miraculous history, worthy and noble if we disallow the miracles, 234, 235; a warrior, 235; a religious patriot, 236; great in organisation, a military leader, law-giver, and ethical instructor, 239; his leadership of the Israelites during the Exodus and desert wanderings, 239-242; the author of the main substance of the ten commandments, 243; he made the ideas of Abraham a great practical force in the world, 243; his death, 244. (See also 263,
INDEX

498

272, 292, 293, 295, 296, 298, 304, and New Zealand, i. 2

Nibelungen Lied, ii. 357

Nicophorus Blummeydes, a courageous abbot in the Eastern empire, ii. 333

Nicolas I (pope), ii. 309, 331

Nicolas V (pope), ii. 347

Nicomedea, ii. 227. (See also Eusebius of Nicomedia)

Nineweh, ii. 278, 294, 303–305, ii. 89, 285

Nirvana, i. 58, 62, 65, 67, 75

Nisanz-el-Mulk, minister of a Seljuk sultan, ii. 251

Nissim, leader of rebellious peasants in Germany, ii. 405

Naboth, i. 275

Nabonidus, king of Babylon, i. 303

Nabotha, ii. 35

Naboth of Nicomedia)

Nahum (prophet), ii. 304, 305

Narbeh, ii. 48

Narras, Roman general under Justinian, ii. 251

Nathan (prophet), ii. 31, 48

Nazareth, ii. 61, 70, 71, 80, 102; also frequently in the phrase “Jesus of Nazareth”

Neander, General History of the Christian Religion and Church, translated by Joseph Torrey, ii. xii, 36, 41, 45

Neander, Joseph Torrey, i. xii, ii. 198, 199, 225, 234, 315, 316, 333, 347, 348, 350, 351, 354, 355, 360, 367, 374

Nebukadnozzar, mentioned in the Din- kards, a Zoroastrian work of mediaeval times, ii. 110; for the Biblical mention of him, 303, 307–311, 313, 337, 344, 346, 396, 397

Nebular hypothesis, i. 9–11

Nehemiah, i. 336, 382; sent by Artaxerxes Memor to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, 361; the work completed in 52 days, 362; his legislation, 362; his date misrepresented by Josephus, 363; opposed by Sanballat, 364; he banished the priest who married a daughter of Sanballat, 364; the importance of this event, 365; he separates certain persons from the priesthood, 373; he, and he only, has the title Tishahatse, 374; catalogue, 376, 377; the final conclusion as to his date, 381; his reforms referred to, 387

Neoplatonism, ii. 192, 193, 196

Nero (Roman emperor), the “beast” of the Revelation, ii. 54, 55; his persecution of the Christians, 165, 174, 178. (See also 185, 367

Nestorianism, ii. 239, 240

Nestorius, ii. 240

Netherlands, ii. 346, 415, 416

Nethinim, ii. 367, 368, 371

Never, dean of, ii. 360

Newman, Francis William, ii. 156, 447, 457

Newman, John Henry (cardinal), ii. 446, 467

Newton, Sir Isaac, ii. 417, 429. (See also Dedication of this work)

New Zealand, i. 2

Niebelungen Lied, ii. 357

Nicera, ii. 333

Nicophorus Blummeydes, a courageous abbot in the Eastern empire, ii. 333

Nicolas I (pope), ii. 309, 331

Nicolas V (pope), ii. 347

Nicomedea, ii. 227. (See also Eusebius of Nicomedia)

Nineweh, ii. 278, 294, 303–305, ii. 89, 285

Nirvana, i. 58, 62, 65, 67, 75

Nisanz-el-Mulk, minister of a Seljuk sultan, ii. 251

Nicolas I (pope), ii. 309, 331

Nicolas V (pope), ii. 347

Nicomedea, ii. 227. (See also Eusebius of Nicomedia)

Nineweh, ii. 278, 294, 303–305, ii. 89, 285

Nirvana, i. 58, 62, 65, 67, 75

Nisanz-el-Mulk, minister of a Seljuk sultan, ii. 251

Nicolas I (pope), ii. 309, 331

Nicolas V (pope), ii. 347

Nicomedea, ii. 227. (See also Eusebius of Nicomedia)

Nineweh, ii. 278, 294, 303–305, ii. 89, 285

Nirvana, i. 58, 62, 65, 67, 75

Nisanz-el-Mulk, minister of a Seljuk sultan, ii. 251

Nicolas I (pope), ii. 309, 331

Nicolas V (pope), ii. 347

Nicomedea, ii. 227. (See also Eusebius of Nicomedia)
of spirituality, 18, 24–26; Buddha's view respecting organisms, p. 66
Origen, a Father of the Church, characterised by greater freedom of thought than was common, p. 179; he had something of the intellectual Greek spirit, 192; believed that life existed in the heavenly bodics, 193; believed in the pre-existence of the human soul, though not in the transmigration of souls, 194; says that God deals with men with a view to their eternal interests (in each case), not merely to their interests in this present life, 195; accused of heresy, and his doctrines disallowed, three centuries after his death, 197. (See also 198, 200)
Orphism, p. 161, 152, 209
Osiris, a name given to Moses by Manetho, p. 237
Othman (caliph), n. 325, 331, 332
Overbeck (German critic), n. 185
Paley's Horne Paulines, p. 497
Palmer, E. H., Oriental scholar, p. 266
Parables, n. 87, 88, 90, 106, 107, 111; parables in act, 110
Paris, n. 340
Parliament, n. 337, 339
Parmenides (Greek philosopher), i. 163, 183, 184
Paris, n. 78, 89, 108
Parthia, Parthians, i. 89, 103, 108
Patmos, II. 55, 176
Patio, p. 11, 124, 176, 177
Patmos, n. 55, 176
Patriarch, n. 198–201, 204, 206
Patrick, the apostle of Ireland, p. 252
Paul (apostle), Saul his Hebrew name, p. 156; his conversion described, and the reasons given for regarding it as a fact of the spiritual, not of the material, order of things, 10–21, 158, 159; a passage from one of his epistles quoted explanatory of this view, 25; his pre-Christian days referred to, 19, 153, 158; frail in body, 73; his visit to Arabia, escape from Damascus, and visit to Peter at Jerusalem, 159; his visions, 140; his determination to convert the whole Roman empire to Christianity, 159; it was peculiarly due to him that Jews and Gentiles were on an equality in the Christian Church, 161; in many respects his teaching was identical with that of the other apostles, but he went beyond them in equalising Gentiles with Jews, 162, 163; his visit to Rome and his death in Rome, probably preceded the visit and the death of Peter, 164, 165; was right in his exaltation of the spiritual kernel of religion over its outer form, 166, 167, but not right in denying the merits of his own nation in their past history, 167, 168; his theological motive for this disparagement, 168–170; the Acts an imperfect account of his missionary career, requiring to be supplemented by his epistles, 170; superior to Peter in genius, but not in heroism, 170; the epistles ascribed to him, except that to the Hebrews, probably all genuine (the difficulties as to the pastoral epistles noted and considered), 171; some striking quotations from his epistles given, 171, 172; his merciful temperment as regards the eternal destiny of the wicked, 172, 173; his authority (along with that of Peter) appealed to by the Roman church after his death, 177; his doctrine of the spiritual body, 191; praised by Longinus, 190; equal to Peter as an apostle—the bearing of this on modern controversies, 281, 283. (For his doctrine see also 7, 8, 36, 245)
Paul of Samosata (heretic), p. 199
Paulus, H. E. G. (German critic), p. 30
Pericles, I. 156, 157
Pentateuch, I. 406, II. 19, 150, 156, 157, 163, 443. (See also the separate books, Genesis, Exodus, &c.)
Pepin (father of Charlemagne), n. 259, 309
Pepin (son of Charlemagne), n. 299, 345
Pepin, n. 104
Pericles, I. 156, 157
Pepin of Sanositas (heretic), p. 199
Peter, n. 257
Pelagius, n. 158, 142, 143
Pentateuch, i. 48, 53; in the Christian Church, n. 387
Penates (Roman deities), n. 192
Perpetuas revolt (in Germany), n. 405
Perna, n. 124, 176, 177
Perseus, n. 339, 142, 143, 145, 155
Perseus, female saint and martyr, n. 341
Pero, n. 198, 199
Pera, n. 78–110, 154–156
Persias (Roman poet), a highminded Stoic, n. 214
Persia, n. 78–110
Pergamum, n. 192, 193
Pergamum, a name given to Moses by Manetho, n. 237
Persia, n. 124, 176
Peregrinus (Roman poet), a highminded Stoic, n. 214
Personality, the source of it mysterious,
INDEX

1. 6; not definitely ascribable to the mysterious nature of God, 8
Peru, ii. 416
Perugino (painter), ii. 358, 359, 423
Peter (apostle), see Simon Peter
Peter Candido IV (doge of Venice), ii. 299
Peter of Chyny, ii. 322
Peter the Hermit, ii. 320, 322
Peter Lombard, ii. 366
Petrarch, ii. 357
Pharaohs of Egypt, the builders of pyramids, i. 4; the Shepherd kings, 230, 232; the oppressor of the Israelites, 233; Menephthah, under whom the Exodus took place, 234, 234; Pharaoh-Necoh, who defeated Josiah, 303, 306.
Pharisees, i. 501, 507, ii. 15, 56, 59, 78, 89, 97, 104, 108, 113, 114, 122, 131, 186, 352
Philadelphia, ii. 181
Philip (apostle), ii. 79
Philip IV (king of France, called the Fair), ii. 554, 579
Philip II (king of Spain), ii. 527
Philip of Macedon, i. 158
Philip, ii. 148
Philistines, i. 247, 249, 250, 255-258, 261, 342, 343
Phocas (Byzantine emperor), ii. 253
Phrygians, possibly the first devisers of a alphabet, i. 31
Pilate, ii. 122, 125
Pindar (poet), i. 151, 152, 163, 209
Pins, ii. 353
Pistis Sophia (Gnostic treatise), ii. 186, 187
Plant life, i. 25
Plataea, battle of, i. 155, 355
Plato, reports the saying of the Delphic oracle about Socrates more correctly than Xenophon, i. 160, 161; his dialogues narrating the trial, imprisonment, and death of Socrates, 163; his testimony to the intellectual character of Socrates apt to be misunderstood in modern times, 164; his representation of the desire of Socrates "to justify the ways of God to man" profound and true, 165-172; his truthfulness as a witness vindicated in other ways, 172 seq.; the brilliance of his style, 174; his account of the loving nature of Socrates, 175, 176; his account of the teaching of Socrates respecting immortality probably in substance correct, 179-181; remarks on various dialogues, 182, 183; he was a literary artist and systematiser, 186; a criticism of his Republic, 183-187; his personal career touched on, 188; his serious religious tone, 187, 188, 189; his received honour from some early Christian writers, but was not understood, ii. 179; his great influence on Neoplatonism, 192.
Platonic dialogues named: Apology, i. 163, 170, 175, 176, 179, 181, 185, 186; Crôto, 163, 179; Phædo, 163, 168-172, 177, 179-181, 184; Republic, 171-173, 182, 183, 185-187; Symposium, 174, 175; Theages, 176; Gorgias, 182; Parmenides, 183; Ios, 186; Laws, 187
Plyny, ii. 110, 115
Plutarchus, ii. 192-194, 196
Putarch, i. 32
Potters, battle of, ii. 340
Pola, mentioned as a seat of the slave trade, ii. 299
Petrarch, ii. 357
Petrarch, ii. 230, 232; the oppressor of the Israelites, 233; Menephthah, under whom the Exodus took place, 234, 240; Pharaoh-Necoh, who defeated Josiah, 303, 305
Necoh, who defeated Josiah, 303, 305
Polycarp (bishop of Smyrna), ii. 46, 47, 207-209; among the Greeks, 248, 258, 265, 293-296, 299, 305, 307, ii. 306
Pompey, ii. 211, 403
Porphyry (neoplatonist), ii. 196, 216, 444
Porcea, ii. 196
Portoguesa, ii. 287, 329, 416
Ptolemis (Greek deity), i. 137
Prague, ii. 373, 374, 377
Prayjapati, highest Hindu deity in the most ancient times, i. 41, 42, 86
Prayer, natural to anyone who believes in God, i. 8; possible in the case of men in their very earliest stage, 17, 18; something analogous may even be experienced by animals, 18; practised by the early Hindus, but with something mechanical conceived in it, 40; with more true feeling in the Kāthā-Upanishad, 48; prayers by Zoroaster, 81, 82, 85; an ambitious prayer found in the later Ariṣṭa, 107; prayer according to Chinese religion, 115, 119, 128; recognised in Greek poetry and philosophy, 162, 167, 168; among the Romans (as explained by Mommsen), 208; in Abraham, 227; in Moses, 234, 235; in David, 263; prayer attributed to Schomn, 266; in Isaiah, 290; in the author of the Lamentations, 314; in Jeremiah, 315; in the prophet of the exile, 331; in the psalms, 341, 342, 346, 547; in Zechariah, 562; what we ought to think about prayer to Jesus Christ, or prayer to the holy departed, as distinguished from prayer to the invisible God, ii. 37; the prayers of Jesus in his childhood, 70; the exhortations of Jesus to men to pray, 75, 79; his own prayer in the garden of Gethsemane, 123; his declaration as to the power of his own prayer, 124; concerning prayers of our own to Jesus Christ, 129; the prayer of Stephen, 132; and of Paul, 169; the prayer of Perpetua, 198; prayer against Arius, 233; the necessity of prayer for bringing harmony into the relations of men with each other, 241; the view of Athanasius, respecting the prayer of Jesus in the garden of Gethsemane, inadequate, 247, 248; prayer as inculcated by Mohammed, 263, 264, 269; as valued by a monarch of the eastern church, 296; in Baber, the Sultan ruler of India, 328; in Jeanne d’Arc, 342; in Roger Bacon, 390; in Raymond Lull, 352; in Huss, 372; in Luther, 408; the German classical writers and philosophers have not realised it sufficiently, 440-442; but Schleiermacher approached more to doing so, 442; yet neither he nor Ritschl nor the followers of Ritschl placed it altogether in its proper central position, 443, 445. (See also 469, 470)
INDEX

Pre-existence of man, r. 180, 181, p. 37

Printing, the discovery of, n. 357

Priscillian (heretic and martyr), n. 236

Proclus (Neoplatonist), n. 239

Procopius, n. 251

Property, questions relating to, n. 74-76; 105-107, 270, 432, 433

Prophet of the Exile, the, author of the last twenty-seven chapters of the book of Isaiah, r. 279; a century and a half later than Isaiah, 316; proclaims Cyrus as the restorer of Jerusalem and Judah, 318; derides the fallen Babylon, 321; exHORTS Israel (i.e. the Jews) to have courage and leave Babylon, 319, 320, 322, 323; his mysterious prophecy of a redeemer, 327; exhorts men to be humble before God, 330; he himself accompanies the party who leave Babylon and reach Jerusalem, 332, 333; his sorrow at the ruined state of city and temple, in contrast with his previous ideal prophecies, 332, 333; it looks as if he returned to Babylon to get fresh recruits for Jerusalem, 333; regards a temple as unnecessary, and yet looks forward to its restoration, 334; his name unknown, 334; the Jews, although they valued his writings, ignored his personality, and why they did so, is quoted by Jesus Christ, n. 71; his prophecy taken by Jesus Christ as marking out the line of action for himself, n. 109, and compare (for a more general reliance on prophecy), 124; references to this are made, l. 329, h. 92, 93; greatly relied upon by the apostles, 162. (See also 59, 60, 61)

Proverbs, book of, l. 266, 267

Psalms, some, not many, psalms probably attributable to David, though hardly in their present form, l. 292, 293; the greater number of them written during the century which witnessed the return from the Babylonian captivity, or shortly afterwards, 338-347, 353; their historical importance, 384; the titles to the psalms prefixed later than the time of Ezra, and therefore untrustworthy, 385, 386; a Maccebean psalm mentioned, 385; the 119th psalm expressive of the reverence for the law felt by the Jews after the captivity, n. 19; the psalms quoted in the temptation of Jesus, 67; quoted by Paul, 168. (See also 444)

Psychical Society, n. 22

Ptolemaeus (Gnostic), n. 187

Ptolemies (kings of Egypt), l. 209, 335, 336, 366, 367, 388, 389

Ptolemy (ancient astronomer), l. 189, n. 288

Purification, n. 287, 393

Purim, feast of, l. 344

Puritan, one of the Hindu names for the Sun-god, l. 38, 56

Pythagoras (famous Greek philosopher), l. 147, 148, 152, 161, 163, 180

Rabelais, n. 417

Rachel (wife of Jacob), l. 290

Racine (dramatist), n. 417

Radbaldus, heathen assailant of the Roman empire, n. 238

Radium, l. 9, 12; its effect referred to, 14

Raphael (painter), n. 359

Radisson, Diet of, n. 409

Rawlinson, Sir Henry, l. 103, 104

Raymond VI (count of Toulouse), n. 368

Raymond Lull, born a t Majorca, 1236

Raymond Lull, lived a worldly life, married and had children, n. 351; received an inward conversion in the thirteenth year of his age, and resolved to consecrate himself to the service of Christ, 352; and to the conversion of the Saracens by a literary work which should be translated into Arabic, 352; this was during the period of the crusades, and he came finally to the conclusion that the method of the crusades was mistaken, 352; became himself a missionary to the Saracens in Africa, and suffered in the cause, 353; in the year 1311 a.d. persuaded the council of Vienne that professorial chairs for teaching eastern languages (for missionary purposes) ought to be founded

Cambridge University Press

© in this web service Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-60518-3 - The Divine Aspect of History: Volume II
John Rickards Mozley

Index

More information
INDEX

502

354; in 1314 A.D. crossed over for the third time to north Africa, to the city of Bugia, and there received the crown of martyrdom, 354; his body was carried over to Majorca, and buried there, 354; a quotation from his writings, 355; a comparison of him with Francis of Assisi, 362; Raynal (French historian), ii. 427, 428; Raynerio Sacchoni, an inquisitor who once had belonged to the Albigenses, ii. 366; Rezn, Arab chemist, ii. 288; Reformation, incidentally mentioned, ii. 269, 297, 380, 382, 319, 324, 394, 397, 421; Reformation era, dealt with in chapter xxxv, ii. 378-418; the title "Reformation" may be retained, though only imperfectly correct for the movement intended by it, 378; the question put, whether that movement should be regarded as intrinsically wrong from the first, by reason of the divine commission which (it is alleged) the Roman church has received, 379; a negative answer given to this question, with reasons assigned, 380-383; the further question then dealt with, whether Luther's actual protest against Rome was just or not; answered in the affirmative, because Luther's protest against the sale of indulgences was absolutely required, and was accepted in the end by the church of Rome itself, 384-385; the deeper questions involved in the indulgences touched on, 387, 388; the general course of the Reformation, apart from its origin, treated, 394-414; the counter-Reformation, in which the Jesuits were prominent, 410-412; the extraordinary force of the empire under Nero, with the Christian empire, 415-418; the character of Caesar, who gave to Rome itself, 384-393; the deeper of Roman religion emphasised by Mommsen, 207-209; Pope Pius IV, 210; the Roman governing power from its origin, treated, 394-414; the collision of the Roman empire with the Christian empire, under Nero, with the Christian Church, and the wickedness of that emperor, 173-175; the conflict continued, 179, 180; a half of 42 years through the edict of Gallienus, 199, 200; the final desperate struggle, and the surrender of the Roman empire to Christianity, 201, 202; Rome still pegan at heart in the

© in this web service Cambridge University Press
www.cambridge.org
INDEX 503

time of Constantine, 228; fall of Rome before the barbarians, 237, 238, 244; II, as a Christian authority: visited by the two greatest apostles, Peter and Paul, n. 164, 165; the persecution in which those two apostles were slain, 165, 174; the authority of the church of Rome after this, 177, 180, 181; the bishop of Rome was influenced by Irenæus, and opposed by Cyprian, 200; the rise of the papacy noted, 209; the bishop of Rome supports Athanasius, 224; two combined causes raised the authority of the bishop of Rome to that eminence which the papacy succeeded in maintaining, viz. the destruction of the pagans of Rome by the Goths and Vandals (Christians though heretics), and the establishment of Constantinople as the main seat of the imperial power, 228; the popes Leo I, 220, 236, 240, Gregory I, 257–259, Leo III, 260, 265, Gregory VII, 313–319, specially noted; the sacking of Rome by Robert Guiscard the Norman, 317; the temporary abandonment of Rome by the popes, 371; the condition of Rome at the time of the Renaissance, 385; a discussion of the intrinsic authority of the church of Rome, 379–384; Romulus, t. 191, 192 Rousseau, his services to mankind (in spite of personal faults) in vindicating the rights of the poor, n. 432–434; Rubruquis (missionary to China), t. 133, 134; Rudolph of Swabia, n. 317; Ruskin, John, n. 447; Russia, the instructions left by one of the early Tsars of Russia to his sons, n. 266–267; the conquest of the eastern part of Russia by the Moslem Tartars, and its liberation after two and a half centuries, 282, 283, 325, 326, 334; Ruth, t. 365; book of, 367; Sabatier, Auguste, n. 435; Sabatier, Paul, n. 435; Sabbath, the commandment inculcating this more valuable in the spirit than in the letter, t. 243; no doubt not ignored in David’s time, though we have little information as to this, 264; mentioned with no special reverence by Hoes and Amos, and slightly by Isaiah, but enjoined stringently by Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the prophet of the exile, 330, 331; the reason being that the publication of Deuteronomy had taken place between the time of the earlier and the later prophets, 331; sabbath-breaking took place among the Jews of Jerusalem in the absence of Nehemiah the governor, and was rebuked by him on his return, 364; the sabbath kept strictly in the time of the Maccabees, except when warfare made action compulsory on that day, 387, 394; the excessive literalness of the keeping of the sabbath by the Pharisees reproved by Jesus, n. 78; Sacraments, see Baptism and Lord’s Supper; Sacred Mount, t. 198, 199; Sacrifices, in India, t. 40, 41, 44, 49, 52; in relation to Buddha, 58; among the Persians, 83, 88, 94; in China, 115, 120; in Greece, 140, 156, 172, 178; Greek and Roman sacrifice contrasted by Mommsen, 208; among the Israelites, 221, 222, 230, 332, 272, 273; the attempted but not completed sacrifice of his son by Abraham, 227–229; the sacrifice of his daughter by Jephthah (and the parallel case of Agamemmon’s daughter in Greek history), 228; reflections on the case of Jephthah, and on a singular passage in Leviticus, 248, 249; disparagement of sacrifice by the prophets, 277; sacrifices, except those in the temple at Jerusalem, forbidden by Josiah, 299; sacrifices offered by Israelites to heathen deities, 293, 307, 308, 333; the prophecy of sacrifice to be offered by all the nations to Jehovah at Jerusalem, 391; sacrifices disparaged by the psalmists, 345; the Jews of Elephantine in Egypt, who had been accustomed to offer burnt offerings in their local temple, were deprived of this right when they rebuilt this temple after its destruction by enemies, 366; mention of burnt offerings in the unhistorical chapters of Ezra and 1 Esdras, 367, 371, 372, 375; Antiochus Epiphanes commands the Jews to sacrifice to heathen gods, and Mattathias resists the command, 391; Judas Maccabaeus restores the temple sacrifices, 392; the Jews refuse to retain the altar which had been desecrated by heathen sacrifices, 395; that desecration, and the cessation of the lawful sacrifices, referred to in the book of Daniel, 401; the attitude of Jesus towards sacrifices, n. 78, 109, 110; they were kept up by the early Jewish Christians for a certain period not wrongly, 156; the sacrifices of the law declared in the epistle to the Hebrews (and rightly) to be types of the self-sacrifice of Jesus Christ, 157 (see also 54); a Moslem reference to them, 328; Sadducees, t. 406, n. 59, 137, 382; Saladin, n. 291; recaptured Jerusalem from crusaders, 323; his character, 324; Salamis, battle of, t. 155, 156, 355; Salome (translator of the Koran), n. 281; Salome, t. 135, 136;
INDEX

Samarcand, ii. 284, 286
Samaria (city or country), i. 271, 276, 285, 289, 290, 295, 296, 304, 381, 394, n. 100-102
Samaritans, the inhabitants, after the captivity, of what had been the kingdom of northern Israel, i. 271; divided in their sentiments towards the Jews, 339, 340; their leaders were half-heathen and from the first were apt to join other nations against the Jews, 241; yet the Samaritan people began by being friendly to the Jews, 355-357; the breach between the two peoples began in the time of the prophet Zechariah, and was lamented by him, 358; Ezra must have been adverse to the Samaritans, though this is not explicitly said, 359; Nehemiah made the breach irretrievable, 384, 385; the author of the book Ecclesiasticus narrowed it in regard to the Samaritans, 366; the history briefly summed up, 384, 385; Josephus speaks of the Samaritans in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes as recreant, but on grounds hardly trustworthy, 380; conquered by John Hyrcanus, 384; regarded with friendly feelings by Jesus, though not as equal to the Jews, n. 48; they refused to allow him and the multitude following him to traverse their country, 101, 102; parable of the good Samaritan, 111; the apostles, in the time of the early Church, had some success in converting the Samaritans, 160; Gnosticism began among the Samaritans, 180-187; the Samaritan nation practically rooted out by the emperor Justinian, 251
Samite, six-threaded stuff, n. 262
Sammites, i. 202, 203
Samuel, Judge of Israel, i. 250; reluctantly anoints Saul as king, 250; the reasons for his reluctance in the main unsellable, 250; his quarrel with Saul afterwards due to their differing views as to Baal, and how we know this, 251, 252; his crime against the Amalekites, 216, 217, 223, 233; the relation in which he stood to David, 253, 254. (See also 261, 272, 394)
Sanballat, i. 364, 381; mentioned both in the book of Nehemiah and in Josephus; hostile to the Jews. (See Sinuballit)
Sanhedrin, ii. 134
Sanskrit, i. 34, 36, 41
Sapphira, n. 148-150
Sappho, i. 145
Sarcens, ii. 259, 285, 352-354, 357, 358
Sarasvatī (Hindu deity), i. 62
Sargon, king of Assyria, i. 289, 355
Sarpi (Fra Paolo), ii. 345
Sassanians (Persian kings reigning from the third to the seventh centuries A.D.), i. 107, 108
Satan, ii. 96
Saturnius (Christian martyr), ii. 198
Saul, anointed as first king of Israel by the prophet Samuel, i. 250; his quarrel with Samuel afterwards probably caused by his desiring unity of worship with the Canaanites, to which Samuel was opposed, 251-253 (the reasons for this opinion given); his friendship for David, 254, and jealousy of David, 255, 256; his death, 258; his slaughter of certain Gibeonites, 262; David’s lamentation over him, 263; a reference to him, 342
Savitri, one of the Hindu names for the Sun-god, i. 38
Saxons, ii. 300, 303
Sayce, professor, i. 112, 229, 338, 396
Scythians, i. 303
Secundulus (Christian martyr), ii. 198
Secundus of Ptolemais, dissenting bishop in the Nicene council, ii. 214, 225
Seleukian Turks, ii. 290, 321, 324, 351, 332
Senecio, i. 214
Senaecrb (king of Assyria), i. 289, 290, 293, 305
Septimius Severus (Roman emperor), ii. 199
Serbia, ii. 283
Serious, a valiant eastern monk, ii. 325, 326
Servetus, ii. 413
Servius Tullius, king of Rome, i. 194
Shadrach, i. 408
Shakespeare, quoted, i. 278, n. 463; referred to, 324, 417
Shaeftel, i. 379, 380
Shear-jashub, meaning, “a remnant shall return (to God),” Isaiah’s elder son, i. 281, 283, 286
Shechem, ii. 267
Shelley, ii. 448
Shepherd kings of Egypt (Hyksos), i. 229, 233, 237, 258
Sheshbazzar, i. 326, 337, 370
Shiloh, i. 248, 289
Shimei, i. 202
Shintoism, i. 135, n. 425
Sidgwick, professor Henry, i. xiv, ii. 298, 343
Sidon, i. 271, ii. 84, 90
Shin, origin of, i. 289
Silk, cultivated in China in early days, i. 117; eggs of silkworm brought from
INDEX 505

China to Europe by two Persian monks II. 251; woven in Constantinople, 261

Silvanus, companion of Paul and Peter, II. 165

Silvanus, companion of Paul and Peter, worthy, 148-150; he accepted the call of the heathen Cornelius as a disciple, 160; taught at Antioch, 163; probably did not meet Paul at Rome, though both apostles were there, 164, 165;

Simeon, a follower of Socrates, I. 177, 181

Simon (the leper), II. 121

Simon de Montfort, n. 337

Simon Peter, his call to be an apostle, II. 165

Simon Zelotes (apostle), n. 79

Sinuballit, the same name as Sanballat, I. 356-381

Sirius, pope, II. 314

Sirena, French protestant unjustly treated, II. 430, 431

Siva (Hindu deity), I. 44

Socrates, the magnitude and religious color of his influence, I. 137; the colour held by him, 159; the recognition of his wisdom by the Delphic oracles, 160, 161; the spirit of trust in the Gods is in him, as it had been in Pindar, Eschylus, and Sophocles, 163; his firmness and tenderness generally defended, 146, 147; the narrative of the death of Ananias and Sapphira, which conduct not commendable is imputed to him, declared untrustworthy, 148-150; he accepted the heathen Cornelius as a disciple, 160;
taught at Antioch, 163; probably did not meet Paul at Rome, though both apostles were there, 164, 165;

Slavery, II. 218, 219, 331

Smerdis, I. 102

Smyrna, II. 181

Socrates concerning virtue put side by side with Christian belief in the way of comparison, 182, 183; his over-valuation of knowledge in the determination of moral questions, 183;
his courage and general excellence, 184; in one point he may perhaps have exercised a misleading influence on Plato, 187; among all the Greeks he is the pre-eminent master, 190; since other early Christian writers, ii. 70; his philosophy, had it been understood, would have benefited the early Church, 184; his belief that the heavenly bodies were not devoid of life mentioned, 194; his influence not prominent in Neoplatonism, 192; mentioned, 341; mentioned by Byron, 449.

Solomon and Gomorrah, ii. 218, 81, 84.

Solomon, at first a monotheist, i. 229; a rebellion raised against him by Hadad, 290; a magnificent and shrewd, but hardly a wise, king, 265; some remarks on the prayer which he is reported to have offered up at the dedication of the temple, 266; his relation to the book of Proverbs, 266, 267; reduced many of the Canaanites to slavery, 267. (See also pages 269–271, 274, 284, 343, 345, 346, 350, 366.)

Solon, the first author of the greatness of Athens, i. 152–154, 156.

Some, a plant defied by the Hindus, i. 37, 38.

Song of Songs (canonical book), i. 366.

Songhees, i. 161–163, 185, 209.

Southey, Robert, i. 44.

Sozomen (ecclesiastical historian), ii. 223, 227.

Spain, ii. 282, 287, 326–328, 331, 346, 415, 416.

Spatalian (secretary of the elector Frederick of Saxony), ii. 393.

Spanish Armada defeated, ii. 415.

Sparta, Spartans, the chief Dorian city, governed nominally by two kings, really by the ephors, i. 144; the Lycurgan legislation made the Spartans narrow but faithful, 145; in one respect more pure than other Greeks, 149; ultra-conservative, 160; guilt of certain murderous acts, 151; they set Athens free from a despot, 153, 154; valiant in Persian wars, 155; rivalry and war with Athens, 157; generous after their victory over Athens, 157, 158; their own supremacy over Greece lasted only one generation, 158. (See also ii. 337, 341.)

Speech, faculty of, the most characteristic distinction between man and the inferior animals, i. 15, 20; the manner in which it originated, 16–18.

Spencer, Herbert, his merit in bringing into clear light the principle of evolution, and the philosophical elements in science generally, i. 5; his doctrine of an Infinite and Eternal Energy from which all things proceed, xxii, 6; his view stands in close neighbourhood to true religion, 7; a reference to him, ii. 448.

Spinoza, see Pantheism.

Stahel, an angelic being in the Zoroastrian religion, i. 108, 109.

Stattingi, ii. 309.

Stanley, dean, ii. 241, ii. 295, 326.

Stephen (martyr), ii. 19, 151–153, 158–160.

Stephen (bishop of Rome), ii. 200.

Stephen, Sir James, ii. 411.

Stepy, Sir James, ii. 411.

Sudras, see Caste.

SUMERIAN LANGUAGES, i. 31, 112.

Sun, the intrinsic nature and origin of, i. 9–13; the conclusion drawn, that it is not in danger of dying out, 14; moreover, that as being a product of organising power, which we cannot but connect with life, it was probably the origin from which terrestrial life was derived, ii. 462, 463. The belief that there is life in the sun was held by Socrates, ii. 194, Plotinus, ii. 192, 193, and Origen, ii. 193. In Hindu mythology, the sun was a deity worshipped under various names, i. 37, 38, 56; worshipped also by the Magi and the Mithraists, 90–92, 95, but not by Zoroaster, 96; in China both observed scientifically, 115, and worshipped, 115; in ancient Greece a deity under the name of Apollo, 138; the revolutions of sun and moon co-ordinated by Meton, 184; the prophets of Israel censured the worship of the sun, 92, 295.

Surya, i. 38.

Susanna, book of, ii. 396.

Swift, Jonathan, ii. 448.

Switzerland, ii. 340.

Sylvester II (pope), originally named Gerbert, ii. 302; interested in intellectual studies, 347.

Symply, after the Babylonian captivity took that place which the “high place” had held before, i. 308, 346. (See also ii. 71.)

Syria, Syrians, ii. 258, 259, 278, 281, 282, ii. 295, 320, 321, 375, 388, 392, 393, 397.

Tacitus, i. 105, 215, ii. 55.

Ta'if, city near Mecca, ii. 270.

Takdimi, the philosophy of Lao-tze, of singular merit, but corrupted afterwards, i. 120–124.

© in this web service Cambridge University Press www.cambridge.org
INDEX 507

Tarquinius Priscus (king of Rome), I. 163

Tarquinius Superbus (king of Rome), I. 193-195

Taras, ii. 161, 259

Tartar, III. 258, 259, 264, 268-270, 290, 292

Tarsus, II. 161, 259

Theodosian Code, II. 235

Theognis (bishop), ii. 216, 225

Theon (bishop of Marcellus), an Arian bishop at the council of Nicaea; ii. 214, 225

Theophilos (bishop of Antioch), the first writer who actually named the apostle John as author of the fourth gospel, II. 47

Thermopylae, battle of, i. 155, 157

Thibet, ii. 287

Thirty Years’ War, n. 415

Thomasean Code, II. 235

Thomas Aquinas, the most famous of the Schoolmen, ii. 355, 356

Togdides, i. 139, 151, 190

Tiberius (Roman emperor), I. 397, n. 59

Tigrid (river), i. 29, 48

Tilbury, n. 232

Tobias, book of, I. 367, 396

Tobit, ii. 47

Toulon, II. 363

Tours, archbishop of, II. 311

Tours, battle of, referred to but not named, n. 259, 278

Tralles, II. 181

Transmigration of souls, I. 49, 66, n. 194

Tremes, ii. 232

Tribunes of the people, I. 199-201

Trinity, doctrine of, II. 37, 353

Troyan war, I. 130, 143, 145, 148

Tughrul (Sultan), II. 332

Tunisia, II. 320, 353

Turbon, a Christian bishop of the Arian heresy, converter of the Goths, and translator of the Bible, ii. 242

Uljuk Khan, an enlightened Mongol, ii. 286

United States, ii. 424, 434

University of Paris, II. 354; Oxford, 354; Salamanca, 355; Prague, 373

Urban II (pope), ii. 320

Urish (prophet of Judaism), i. 306

Utrius and Thummim, i. 502, 373, 374

Uzair (king of Judah), i. 280, 281
INDEX

Vaisyas, see Caste
Valens (Roman emperor), ii. 235
Valentinus (Gnostic philosopher), ii. 187
Valerian (Roman emperor), ii. 199
Vandal, ii. 220, 238, 240, 317
Variation in living organisms, i. 18-21
Varuna (Hindu deity), i. 38
Vasco di Gama, circumnavigator of the Cape of Good Hope, ii. 357
Vatatzes, John Douce (Greek emperor), ii. 333
Veil, ii. 262
Venice, ii. 296, 345, 359
Vertebrate creatures (origin of), i. 26
Victor, bishop of Rome, ii. 181, 200
Vienna, scene of defeat of Turks by John Sobieski, ii. 329
Virgil, i. 117, 211, 212, ii. 250, 268
Virgin birth (the question of), iii. 38
Vistaspa, the royal patron and convert of Zoroaster, i. 79, 82, 89; his conversion dated by the Pahlavi texts either as 631 B.C. or 695 B.C., 97; the opinion of Ammianus Marcellinus adopted, that he was the same as Vistaspa or Hystaspes, the father of the great conqueror Darius, which implies a date slightly later than either of the two mentioned above, 99; the objection to this, from the silence of the Behistun inscription respecting Zoroaster, answered, 98; he was a young man at the time of his conversion, 100; if identified with the father of Darius, he helped Darius in subduing his enemies, 103; the identification discussed and vindicated, 109, 110
Vitalian (pope), ii. 259
Vitello, early scientific writer, a Pole, ii. 349
Viviers, the monastery to which Cassiodorus retired, ii. 255, 256
Vladimir II, Russian Tsar; his will quoted, ii. 293-297
Voltaire, his revolutionary spirit in religion, ii. 425, 426; the persecution to which he had been subjected, 427; not a profound thinker, 429; but his merit in the way of clear intellect and the inculcation of simple industry, 429; his still greater merit in the abhorrence of cruelty which he exhibited and taught, 430-431; his fault, both in conduct and teaching, in his attitude towards women, 431, 432; the political results of his teaching, 434
Waldenses, ii. 368, 369, 371
Wald (one of the caliphs of Damascus), ii. 281
Walther von der Vogelweide (early German poet), ii. 357
Warde-Fowler, W., i. 191-194, 209
Wat Tyler, ii. 338
Wellhausen (German critic), ii. 444
Wesleyanism, ii. 456
West, E. W., i. 101, 104, 106, 108-110
Whewell, W., ii. 294, 349
Whitby, synod of, ii. 442
William I (king of England), ii. 303
Williams Jackson, professor, i. 87, 104, 109
Wilson, Sir R. K., ii. 339
Wittenberg, ii. 389, 404, 405, 408
Word, the, ii. 54, 212, 228, 246, 247
Wordsworth, ii. 345, 446
Worms, Concordat of, ii. 319; Diet of, 404, 409
Writing, art of, the great value of, and the characteristic which most distinguishes civilised from uncivilised man, 29; a development of the sculptural art, 29; hieroglyphs the earliest form of it, 30; the origin of it in Babylonia and Egypt, 31; Chinese writing derived from these, and never attaining to an alphabet, 31, 112; the Phoenicians may have been the first inventors of an alphabet, 31; the first inventors of the art were religious races, 32; the art needed mutual friendliness among men to bring it to perfection, though the first use of it generally to celebrate warlike victories, 33; writing unknown in India before the eighth century B.C., and looked upon with suspicion even after that time, 36; Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob acquainted with the art of writing, 224
Wubstan (bishop), ii. 303, 304
Wykiffe, ii. 338, 339, 371, 372, 410
Xavier, ii. 412
Xenophon (Greek philosopher), i. 163
Xenophon, i. 149; he laments the want of true chieftainship over the Hellenic race, 158; a passage respecting Socrates, 161; he does not give the intellectual side of Socrates, but does give the practical side, 164, 165; a remarkable passage from him quoted in regard to the religion of Socrates, 166-168; on the whole his testimony respecting Socrates agrees remarkably with that of Plato, 170, 171, 173-175, 177, 181, 182, 184, 187; where he differs from Plato, he sometimes has the advantage, sometimes not, 165, 172, 178; his own character as a man and a writer, 165
Xerxes, i. 155, 156; shown to be the same name as Ahasuerus, 338. (See also 339, 344, 350, 393, 370, 384, 396)
Yajnavalkya, i. 46, 59
Yama, son of Vivasvat, i. 88
INDEX

509

Yima, son of Vivavahat, r. 58
Yoga, I. 47, 48, 61
Young, E. M., II. 255
Zachæus, II. 107, 142, 308
Zechariah (pope), II. 299
Zaid, II. 266
Zechariah (prophet), I. 87, 164; this sentiment renounced in later Zaid, n. 269 obscure, I. 78, 79; the Zacharias (pope), II. 299
Zoroaster (Zarathustra), his history
Zechariah (prophet), I. 349; distinguished oldest part of the Zendavesta, see Avesta
Zendist, I. 80 of Fire, 96; his date preferably to be Zerubbabel, the question of his date his death at Balkh, when that city
Zeus, chief deity among the Greeks, the Zwingli, ii. 405 Zephaniah, I. 80, 107, 140, 107-110. The treatises named or Zoroastrianism, I. 1, 98, 107, 108, II. 57, 190, 280
Zoroastrian writings: (i) Avesta, including Gathas, the oldest part of the Zoroaster quoted from them, 93, 94 (this illustrated by a quotation); Vendidad, gives a Yasta, as fantastic as the Vendidad, I. 80; but a sincere passage respecting Yazdans, who in his time were not hostile to the Jews, 354; the breach between the two peoples began either at the close of his life or shortly afterwards, 357, 358; the history of Sanballat, as told by Josephus, confirms the later date for Zerubbabel, 364, 355; as also the fact that he is considerably after Sheshbazzar, 370; certain arguments against the later date met, 370-383. A romantic story about him in the first book of Esdras referred to, 369
Zeus, chief deity among the Greeks, the religious sentiment towards him, I. 162,