

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-62348-4 - Life and Times of Stein or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age:

Volume II

J. R. Seeley

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS OF VOLUME II.

PART IV.

MINISTRY OF STEIN.—TRANSITION.

CHAPTER I.

THE SPANISH REVOLUTION.

Acts in the Napoleonic Drama, 3. Fourth Act, 4. The Continental System, 5. Extra-European views, 6. How to deal with Spain, 7. Serious mistake of Napoleon, 8. His objects, 9. They require the expulsion of the Bourbons, 10. Ostensible justification of it, 11. Its failure has condemned it, 14. The Spaniards 'not exhausted by political passions,' 15. An insufficient explanation, 16. A state which is also a nation, 17. The Spaniards united by religion, 18; but also by nationality, 19. Consequence of this, 20. Extent of Napoleon's disaster, 21. It is only superficially repaired, 23. Beginning of the wars of nations, 24. Turning-point in Stein's life, 25. His own account of it, 26. He begins to meditate war, 28. Fichte's Addresses, 29. They are an unconscious commentary on the Spanish Revolution, 30. Likeness of Fichte and Stein, 30. Account of the book, 31. What is a Nation? 32. Difference between patriotism and civic duty, 33. Patriotism invincible, 34. Fichte does not preach the unity of Germany, 35. He admires the old Empire, 36. His views on education, 37. German culture resides in the middle class, 38. The natural frontier of a state is its spiritual frontier, 39. Closing exhortation, 40. Three kinds of Revolution, 41. The Spanish Revolution, 42 3—42

CHAPTER II.

STEIN AND INSURRECTION.

How Stein expected to shake off the yoke of Napoleon, 43. His expectation disappointed, 44. Austria preparing for war, 45. Stein's predictions, 46. Ideas about the way of rousing an insurrection, 47.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-62348-4 - Life and Times of Stein or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age:

Volume II

J. R. Seeley

Table of Contents

More information

vi

CONTENTS

Prudence of the plan discussed, 47. Scharnhorst's opinion, 48. Stein's prevision of the Russian Expedition, 50. Scharnhorst's plan of a Prussian rising, 50. Stein's comments, 51. The King depends on Russia, 52. Shall the Ministers resign? 53. Stein's position undermined, 55. Intrigues of the Opposition, 55. The French army to be recalled from Prussia, 57. Napoleon's narrow escape in 1809, 58. Importance of the fall of Stein, 59. The Czar arbiter of the situation, 60. Object of the Erfurt Congress, 61. The Czar in Königsberg, 62. Stein answers his arguments, 63. The Czar leaves for Erfurt, 64. Negotiations about the French evacuation, 65. What position Prussia might have taken up, 66. Napoleon's demands, 67. Stein's report on them, 68. His conclusion, 69. Napoleon's calculations, 70 43-71

CHAPTER III.

STEIN AND THE TUGENDBUND.

Complete change in Stein's position, 72. The risk he runs, 73. Why he takes so extreme a course, 74. Stein reputed the founder of the Tugendbund, 75. The belief universal at the time, 76. Quotation from Marwitz, 76. Its inaccuracy, 78. Stein's own account, 79. His unqualified denial, 80. Account of the Society, 81. Its laudable intentions, 82. Schleiermacher on the possible abuse of it, 83. Niebuhr's opinion, 84. Stein's disapproval explained, 84. It is attested by the papers of the Tugendbund, 86. Theory that he favoured it underhand, 87. Schön and the anonymous 'statesman,' 88. Other Secret Societies confounded with the Tugendbund, 89. Schleiermacher's mission to Königsberg, 90. His mysterious letters, 91. The Secret Societies chiefly military, 93. Niebuhr's alarm about Stein, 94 72-95

CHAPTER IV.

MILITARY REFORM.

Great results of Scharnhorst's reforms, 96. The fairest aspect of war, 97. What was the old military system of Prussia? 98. Two sorts of conscription, 99. Partial conscription in old Prussia, 100. Its demoralising operation, 101. Gneisenau's remarks, 102. Two possible reforms, 103. Reasons for choosing universal conscription, 104. Defensive character of Prussian wars, 105. A citizen-army, 106. Not a militia, 107. More expensive than a militia, 108. Less expensive than a voluntary army, 109. The citizen-army is a short-service army, 110. Hardenberg on the Army, 112. His plan of reform, 114. Abolition of exemptions and of brutal punishments, 115. Henriette Herz on the reform, 115. History of the Military Commission, 116. Scharnhorst's hopes, 117. The King's suggestions, 118. Prince August's Memoir, 119. The Commission on the King's suggestions, 121. Ignorance of the officers, 122. Scharnhorst's first Memoir, 123. His Provisional Sketch of the Constitution of an army of Reserve, 124. The Provincial Troops, 126. They are not to be put through the standing army, 127. Misinterpretation of his words, 128. Relations of Stein and Scharnhorst, 129. Criticisms of Stein and Schön on the Provisional Sketch, 130. Secret Article of the Treaty of September, 1808, 131. Scharnhorst Minister of War till 1810, 131; afterwards Chief of the Staff; Scharnhorst's own account of his reforms, 132. Summary, 135 . . . 96—136

OF VOLUME II.

vii

CHAPTER V.

THE INTERCEPTED LETTER.

The Moniteur for September 8th, 1808, 137. Prints a letter of Stein to Wittgenstein, 138. It arrives at Königsberg on the 21st; Niebuhr's remarks on it criticised, 140. A correction of the text, 141. Stein's prudence discussed, 142. Assessor Koppe, 143. Character of Wittgenstein, 144. Plot of the Berlin party, 146. Wittgenstein's connexion with it, 147. Count Senfft's opinion, 148. Serious object of the letter, 148. Stein sees the Moniteur, 149. He asks for his dismissal, 150. Napoleon seizes the advantage, 151. The new Convention, 151; signed, 152. The King's position, 153. What he should have done, 154. Public opinion in Prussia, 155. Agitation in the newspapers, 156. The beginning of political parties, 158. The King ratifies the Convention, 159. This step discussed, 159. Stein at first not informed of the ratification, 161. He repeats his opinion and request for dismissal, 162. Memorial addressed to Stein, 162. Rise of Continental Liberalism, 164. Approaching fall of Stein, 165. His legislation still remains to be described, 166. Yorck on Stein, 167. The Perponcher Club, 169 . . . 137—169

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-62348-4 - Life and Times of Stein or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age:

Volume II

J. R. Seeley

Table of Contents

More information

viii

CONTENTS

PART V.

MINISTRY OF STEIN.—CONCLUSION.

CHAPTER I.

LEGISLATIVE REFORM.

Resemblances of the Stein-Hardenberg legislation to that of the French Revolution, 173. Differences, 174. The old regime of France and Prussia compared, 174. Prussian Royalty, 175. The Prussian nobles not sinecurists, 176. Faults of the Prussian bureaucracy, 177. It is less arbitrary than the French, 179. Stein somewhat strengthens it, but at the same time lays the foundation of self-government, 180. Prussian finance more respectable than French, 181. Prussia's Protestantism politically an advantage, 181. The peasantry reap some benefit from the military system, 182. The transition made in Prussia without disturbance, 183. Jena the one moving cause, 183. Two series of reforms supplementary to the Emancipating Edict, 184. Manorial system in Prussia, 185. What is meant by the abolition of serfdom, 186. Hardenberg's Edict of 1811, and Stein's disapproval of it, 187. Domain Lands, 187. The peasantry on them, 188. Suggestion to give them proprietorship, 189. Three schemes, 189. Stein's report, 190. He condemns the scheme of the Immediate Commission, 191; approves that of Schrötter with modifications, 192. Stägemann's opinion of the reform, 193. Free-trade measures, 193. List of monopolies abolished, 194 173—195

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-62348-4 - Life and Times of Stein or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age:

Volume II

J. R. Seeley

Table of Contents

More information

OF VOLUME II.

ix

CHAPTER II.

ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM.

Stein pauses in reform, 196. His reasons, 197. Administrative Reform waits for the departure of the French, 198. Magnitude of the Administrative Reform, 199. Chronological arrangement abandoned, 200. The old administrative system, 201. Review of its defects, 202. The provincial and real systems confused, 203. The War and Domains Chamber, 204. The Landrath, 204. Stein demands local liberties, 205. His reasons remarkable, 206. His Edict does not become law, but one substantially similar, 207. His Reform of the Provincial Administration, 207. Introduction to the former Edict, 207. The Council of State, 208. The Departments, 209. The Council of State not realised, 210. A different Council of State introduced by Hardenberg, 211. The King's Privy Cabinet, 212. Later changes in the Ministerial Departments, 212. The Statistical Office, 213. The Scientific Technical Deputation, 214. Abolition of the War and Domains Chamber, 215. Abolition of Administrative Justice, 216. Remodelling of the District, 217. Difference between Districts and Provinces, 218. Stein's reasons for retaining the Province, 219. Three Superior Presidents, 220. Opinions against this office, 221. What Stein had not time to do, 222 196—222

CHAPTER III.

MUNICIPAL REFORM.

How far Stein created popular institutions, 223. Prussia and France begin liberty at different points, 224. Stein hampered by want of time, 225. Originality of the Municipal Reform, 226. Municipal Government in modern France, 226. Imitations of this in Germany, 227. Maurer and F. v. Raumer on Stein's law, 227. Dahlmann's opinion, 228. Stein's creation and English municipal institutions, 229. History of the Town in Germany, 230. Cause of its decline, 230. Two kinds of Town, 231. Decay of the Prussian Towns, 232. Why Stein began with the Towns, 233. History of

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-62348-4 - Life and Times of Stein or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age:

Volume II

J. R. Seeley

Table of Contents

More information

x

CONTENTS

the Town Ordinance, 234. Why Municipalities were favoured in Prussia and suppressed in France, 235. Representation from the Aldermen of Königsberg, 236. Stein generalises the scheme, 236. Later stages of its progress, 237. Royal Assent, 238. Abstract of the Law, 238. This Liberty not won by a struggle with Government, 244. It resembles the Military Reform, 244. Objections to particular points in it, 245. Revised Law of 1831, 246. Further changes after 1848, 247 223—247

CHAPTER IV.

STEIN'S RETIREMENT.

How did Stein fall? 248. Delay in his expulsion and proscription, 249. Clamour of the Berlin Opposition, 250. Napoleon to Soult on September 10th, 251. Secret Article in the Treaty directed against Stein, 251. Mistake in it, 252. French threats, 253. Cause of Napoleon's hesitation, 254. The Czar's interest in the matter, 255. The King unwilling to part with Stein, 256. Napoleon embarrassed by the Spanish difficulty, 257. Stein charged with clinging to office, 258. The charge unfounded, 259. The Czar's advice, 260. Stein proposes to enter the Council of State, 261. The King gradually sundered from Stein, 262. A proposed Proclamation on Reform, 263. The King refuses to sign it, 264. Stein asks for his dismissal, 264. Napoleon's probable feeling about Stein, 265. The Third Bulletin, 266. Conduct of the French at Berlin, 267. Petition in favour of Stein, 267. Wittgenstein in trouble, 268. The Countess Voss, 269. Persecution of Schleiermacher, Wolf and Schmalz, 270. The question of Stein's successors, 271. The General Conference, 272. Stein's functions to be divided between two Ministers, 273. Schön and Count Dohna, 274. Character and views of Voss, 275. The King consults Hardenberg, 276. Altenstein to be Finance Minister, 277. Ministry of Dohna, Altenstein and Beyme, 278. Scharnhorst remains, 279. Complete failure of the new Ministry, 279. Shall the King return to Berlin? 280. Stein attacks Köckeritz, 281. Attacks the receptions of the Countess Voss, 282. Decides against the visit to St Petersburg, 283. Stein's resignation; Royal Assent to the Administrative Reform, 284 248—284

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-62348-4 - Life and Times of Stein or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age:

Volume II

J. R. Seeley

Table of Contents

More information

OF VOLUME II.

xi

CHAPTER V.

STEIN'S PROSCRIPTION.

The Political Testaments of Hardenberg and Stein, 285. Proposed Reform Proclamation, 286. Its indications of further reforms, 287. Difference between a Political Testament and the Reform Proclamation, 288. The Political Testament, 289. Scheme of a National Representation, 293. Vincke's views on the subject, 294. Decline of the Noblesse, 295. A Parliament with two Chambers impossible in Prussia, 296. Necessity of abolishing Patrimonial Jurisdiction, 296. Scheffner's pamphlet, 297. Stein hopes to maintain the noblesse, 298. How far Stein's programme was carried into effect, 298. What would have happened if Stein had not fallen, 299. Noblesse to be declared in abeyance, 300. Schrötter to be rewarded, 300. Why Stein is not rewarded, 300. Schön's Diary, 301. A letter from Stein to Schön, 306. How Schön regarded Stein at that time, 307. Schön the writer of the Political Testament, 308. Why Stein did not write it himself, 309. Universal enthusiasm for Stein, 310. General despondency after his fall, 310. Meeting of Stein and Vincke, 311. Stein's prospects, 311. His dangerousness to Napoleon, 312. Stein on his own fall, 313. His arrival at Berlin, 314. Davoust's inquiry after him, 315. Napoleon's letters of November 16th, 315. 'Le nommé Stein,' 316. Napoleon's sound judgment, 317. Stein a ruined man, 318; but famous, 319. His flight, 319 285—319

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-62348-4 - Life and Times of Stein or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age:

Volume II

J. R. Seeley

Table of Contents

More information

xii

CONTENTS

PART VI.

STEIN IN EXILE.

CHAPTER I.

THE FIRST RISING OF GERMANY.

Stein's flight to the Riesengebirge, 323. Determines to go to Prag, 324. Count Gessler accompanies him, 324. Reaches Prag and receives letters from the Austrian Minister, 325. Settles at Brünn, where he is joined by his family, 326. Letter from Gentz, 326. War of 1809, 327. Count Stadion, 328. Compared with Stein, 329. More a diplomatist than a statesman, 330. The Archduke Charles, 331. Compared with Scharnhorst, 332. Military principles, 333. The Austrian Landwehr, 335. Austria as a revolutionary Power, 336. What she could gain from the Spanish principle, 337. Chance of overturning the Kingdom of Westphalia, 338. Failure of the Campaign, 339. Causes of it, 340. Periods of the war, 341. English mistake, 341. Peace signed, 342. Collapse of Austria, 343. Stein not employed, 344. Explanation by Gentz, 344. Stein's answer, 345. Danger of his position, 346. Marianne vom Stein in Hessen, 347. Dörnberg, 347. Rising in Hessen, 348. Its failure, 349. Marianne arrested, 349. Sent to Paris, 350. Was she innocent? 351. Stein removes to Troppau, 352. His letter to the Prince of Orange, 353. Plan of a German rising and Stein's part in it, 354. Austria will do nothing, 355. Apparent destruction and real new birth of Germany, 356 323—357

CHAPTER II.

STEIN IN RETIREMENT.

Descriptions of Stein, 358. By Count Uwaroff, 359. Faults in this description, 363. Stein henceforth rather a German than a Prussian, 364. Dalberg as a representative of Germany subject to

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-62348-4 - Life and Times of Stein or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age:

Volume II

J. R. Seeley

Table of Contents

More information

OF VOLUME II.

xiii

Napoleon, 365. His early life, 366. W. v. Humboldt on him, 367. His writings on Government, 368. Humboldt's opposite views, 369. His ambiguous conduct with respect to the League of Princes, 370. Dalberg Archbishop of Mainz, 371. Saves his see by the help of Napoleon, 372. His conduct at the disendowment of the German Church, 373. Napoleon unmasked, 374. Dalberg's compliances, 375. His behaviour in the war of 1805, 376. Proposes to make Napoleon German Emperor, 377. Cardinal Fesch Coadjutor of Mainz, 378. Dalberg Prince Primate in the Confederation of the Rhine, 379. Dalberg at Erfurt, 380; will not help Stein, 381; illustrates the want of patriotism in Germany, 382. Cosmopolitan way of thinking, 383; shown in Lessing, Wieland, 384; and still more Goethe, 385. Apparent retrogression of Stein's school, 386. The question for Europe in the age of Napoleon, 388. How Stein supported himself, 388. Refuses to submit to Napoleon, 389. Removes to Prag, 390. His historical studies, 390. Teaches his daughter history, 391. Despairs of the present generation, 392. Application of the Frau vom Stein to Napoleon, 393. It is not presented, 394. Description of Stein by Varnhagen v. Ense, 394. Conversations on the French Revolution, 397 358—398

CHAPTER III.

PROGRESS OF REFORM IN PRUSSIA.

Impression left by Stein's Ministry in Prussia, 399. His successors predestined to failure, 400. Prussia during the war of 1809, 402; she almost breaks with Napoleon, 404. Proposal to cede Silesia, 405. A revolution in the Prussian Government, 406. Wittgenstein's Memorial, 407. The King's low opinion of his Ministers, 407. Hardenberg summoned, 408. Meaning of the change, 409. Napoleon guided by calculation, not by passion, 410. Niebuhr and Hardenberg, 411. Niebuhr's retirement, 412. Stein's disapprobation, 413. Did he change his opinion? 414. Niebuhr to Stein on the fall of the Ministry, 415. Niebuhr no martyr, 415. F. v. Raumer on Niebuhr, 416. Stein's critique of the new financial plan, 417; proposes a change of officials, 417; and severity towards the noblesse, 418; paper money in 1810, 418. Schön quotes Wilberforce, 419. Stein's answer, 419. Hardenberg declares Stein his master in finance,

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-62348-4 - Life and Times of Stein or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age:

Volume II

J. R. Seeley

Table of Contents

More information

xiv

CONTENTS

420. Hardenberg's Edicts, 421. A new dictatorship, 421. A National Representation promised, 422. W. v. Humboldt makes the acquaintance of Stein, 423. His early life, 424; his quietism, 425. Effect of Stein on him, 426. His work in Prussia, 427. His official position, 428. Influence of F. A. Wolf and Pestalozzi, 429. The Normal School, 429. Foundation of the University of Berlin, 430. To atone for the loss of Halle, 431. Shall the new University be at Berlin? 432. Professors appointed, 433. List of Rectors, 433. Exceptional relations of culture and politics, 434. Humboldt between Goethe and Stein, 435 399—435

CHAPTER IV.

THE LAST STAGE OF PRUSSIA'S HUMILIATION.

Prussia descends still lower, 436. What more she could lose, 437. New Edicts of Hardenberg, 438. Napoleon's object to enforce the Continental System, 439. What he wants of Prussia, 440. Beginning of the diplomatic struggle, 440. Prussia's prospect if she should join Napoleon, 441; if she should join Russia, 442. But was war certain? 442. The Russian strategy of retrograde movements, 443. How this affects Prussia, 444. Napoleon's force underrated, 444. Scharnhorst on what Prussia can give Napoleon, 445. Napoleon can do without it, 446. He can occupy Prussia or use the threat of occupation, 447. First Prussian proposals ill received, 447. She tries threats, 448. French proposals, 449. Hardenberg would join Russia, 449; but cannot form a Coalition, 450. Controversy among Prussian politicians, 450. Hardenberg's dissimulation, 451. Ompteda on the double Cabinet and on the war-party, 452. Revolutionary schemes, 454. Count Arnim v. Boitzenburg, 454. His views and Schleiermacher's on Hardenberg's administration, 455. Arnim visits Stein at Prag; dies suddenly, 457. Napoleon's ultimatum, 458. Extremity of Prussia, 459. Stein begins to think ill of Hardenberg, 460. The Treaty with France ratified, 460. What it involved, 461. The King responsible, 461. His ultimate good-luck, and hence a reputation for mysterious wisdom, 462. The phrase 'justified by success,' 463. Napoleon's failure in Russia not expected, and least of all by the King, 464 436—464

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-62348-4 - Life and Times of Stein or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age:

Volume II

J. R. Seeley

Table of Contents

More information

OF VOLUME II.

XV

CHAPTER V.

STEIN IN RUSSIA.

Stein summoned by the Czar, 465. Flattering nature of the message, 467. Stein's answer; he travels to Wilna, 468. The Czar's views, 469. The impression he may have formed of Stein, 469. Stein's prophetic words, 471. Stein's opinion of the Czar, 472. His anticipations about the Campaign, 473. Remoter possibilities, 474. These possibilities not realised, 476; he is henceforth devoted to foreign policy, 476. 'A very interesting passage of my life,' 477. Russian affairs to be slightly treated, 478. He declines to enter the Russian service, 479. His first audience, 479. His description of the Czar, 480. His opinion of him rises later, 481. He is adviser on German affairs, 481. His movements in Russia, 482; at Moscow, 483; misses Madame de Stael, 483. Is impressed by the spirit of the people, 484; becomes sanguine, 485; settles at St Petersburg, 486; reads Thucydides, 487; meets Madame de Stael, 487; her chapter on Enthusiasm, 488. Arrival of Arndt, 488; his book on Stein, 489; his early life, 490; becomes Professor at Greifswald, 493; his feelings about Napoleon, 494; his Spirit of the Age, 495; early in 1812 receives at Prag a message from Stein, 496; his journey to St Petersburg, 496; impressions of Stein, 497; their first meeting, 498; their relation, 499. Arndt on Madame de Stael and Schlegel, 500. Hatred of the French, 501. Russian society, 502. Admiration of Stein, 503. His hopefulness, 505; he lectures the Empress Dowager, 505 465—506

CHAPTER VI.

THE GERMAN COMMITTEE.

Stein's memoir on the means of rousing the Germans, 507. The Czar's answer, 510. Another memoir; the Czar must emancipate Germany, 511; boldness of this view, 512. Nomination of the German Committee; its members described, 513. Its first sitting, 514. Stein afraid of being absorbed in it, 515. New plan for a German insurrection, 515. Its political significance, 517. Protest

Cambridge University Press

978-1-107-62348-4 - Life and Times of Stein or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age:

Volume II

J. R. Seeley

Table of Contents

More information

xvi

CONTENTS OF VOLUME II.

of Prince August of Oldenburg, 517. Stein's answer, 518; his attack on the small Princes, 519; his contempt for the Tugendbund, 520. The party of territorial sovereignty, 521. Stein and Münster, 521. The German Legion, 522. Arentschild, 523. The legend of the three hundred Prussian officers, 523. The Duke of Oldenburg, 525. Stein's coup d'état, 526. Appeal to the Germans, 527. Stein's rhetoric, 528. The Czar's corrections, 529. The Prussians under Yorck, 530. Stülpnagel; how he overcomes Stein's antipathy, 531. Hindrances to the German Legion, 532. Mortality in the Legion, 533. Stein's plans modified in the sequel, 534. Napoleon's disaster alters everything, 535. Secret Societies, 535. Stein still knows nothing of the Tugendbund, 536. Gruner presides over the agitation, 536. Arndt's Catechism, 537. Gruner arrested, 538 . 507—538

CHAPTER VII.

STEIN AND THE RUSSIAN CAMPAIGN.

His influence on Russian policy, 539; it does not begin till the Russian Campaign is decided, 540. His want of confidence in Russian management, 540. His contempt for Romanzoff, 541. Mischievous influence of Romanzoff, 542. Stein's attack on him, 543. Stein advocates an English alliance, 544. Napoleon enters Moscow, 545. Will the Czar yield? 545. His resolute firmness, 546. Was it caused by Stein's support? 548. Bernhardt's view, 548. Stein's own opinion inferred from his autobiography, 550. He reports on finance, 551. Napoleon's sudden reverse, 552. Explanation of his conduct, 553. Change in Stein's fortunes, 555. His happiness, 555 539—556