OBJECTS AND INFORMATION STRUCTURE

In many languages, the objects of transitive verbs are either marked by grammatical case or agreement on the verb, or they remain unmarked: this is differential object marking. This book is a cross-linguistic study of how differential object marking is affected by information structure, the structuring of the utterance in accordance with the informational value of its elements and contextual factors. Marked objects tend to be associated with old information or information that the sentence is about, while unmarked objects tend to express new information. The book also sheds light on grammatical patterning in languages with differential object marking: in some languages marked and unmarked objects have identical grammatical properties, whereas in other languages marked objects are more active in syntax. Finally, it provides a theory of the historical changes that led to the emergence of various patterns of differential object marking.

MARY DALRYMPLE is Professor of Syntax in the Faculty of Linguistics, Philology and Phonetics at the University of Oxford.

IRINA NIKOLAEVA is a lecturer in Endangered Languages in the Department of Linguistics at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London.

Preface and Acknowledgements

Our work on this topic began in connection with our participation in the AHRC project “Noun Phrase Agreement and Coordination”, a joint project which involved, besides us, Louisa Sadler, Ryo Otaguro, and Aline Villavicencio at the University of Essex (AHRC grant MRG-AN10939/APN17606, 2004–2006). We are grateful to Louisa, Ryo, and Aline for helpful comments and discussion as our ideas developed over the course of the project.

Earlier versions of the work were presented at the 2005 International Lexical Functional Grammar Conference (LFG05) in Bergen, the 2005 Linguistic Association of Great Britain conference in Cambridge, the 2005 Colloque de Syntaxe et Sémantique à Paris (CSSP 2005), the University of Leipzig in December 2007, the University of Manchester in April 2008, the workshop “Arctic Languages: Syntax, Morphology, Lexicon” at the University of Tromsø in September 2009, the workshop “Variation and Change in Argument Realisation” at the University of Naples in May 2010, the Surrey Linguistics Circle in December 2010, and the State of the Art Seminar on Differential Object Marking and Information Structure at the University of Konstanz in December 2010. An early version of our work appeared as Dalrymple and Nikolaeva (2005), though it will be clear to readers of that paper that our ideas have evolved considerably since its publication. We have profited from discussion of these earlier versions with Farrell Ackerman, Ash Asudeh, David Beck, Balthasar Bickel, Miriam Butt, Elizabeth Coppock, Greville Corbett, David Cram, Anahita Farudi, Ron Kaplan, Tracy Holloway King, Aditi Lahiri, Olivia Lam, Louise Mycock, Tara Mohanan, Louisa Sadler, Devyani Sharma, Nigel Vincent, Yogendra Yadava, and Annie Zaenen.

For very helpful comments on drafts of this book as it took shape, we thank Farrell Ackerman, Ash Asudeh, Miriam Butt, Dolgor Guntsetseg, Dag Haug, Sigve Berge Hofland, Bozhil Hristov, Nazareth Kifle, Aditi Lahiri, Louise Mycock, and Louisa Sadler. We are grateful to our language consultants for their generous assistance: Ghazaleh Kad and Shamsi Saber for Persian, Dolgor Guntsetseg and Tuya Bavuu for Khalkha Mongolian, Galina Koreneva and Anna Lamdo for Tundra Nenets, and Devyani Sharma and Tara Mohanan for
