Contributors

XINYIN CHEN is professor of psychology at the University of Pennsylvania. He is a fellow of the American Psychological Association (APA) and Association for Psychological Science (APS) and a member of the Executive Committee of the International Society for the Study of Behavioral Development (ISSBD). His research interest is mainly in children and adolescents' socioemotional functioning, parenting and social relationships from a cultural-contextual perspective. He has edited several books and published a number of book chapters and articles in major journals in the field (e.g., Child Development, Developmental Psychology, Annual Review of Psychology).

HUIHUA DENG is professor at the Research Center for Learning Science, Southeast University in Nanjing, China.

HARRIET EVANS is professor of Chinese cultural studies, and director of the Contemporary China Centre, School of Social Sciences, Humanities and Languages, University of Westminster. She is author of Women and Sexuality in China: Dominant Discourses of Female Sexuality and Gender since 1949 (Polity Press, 1997), and The Subject of Gender: Daughters and Mothers in Urban China (Rowman and Littlefield, 2008). She is currently working on an oral history of urban change in central Beijing and local practices of cultural heritage.

VANESSA L. FONG is associate professor of education at the Harvard Graduate School of Education. Her research focuses on childbearing, childrearing, education, work, health, language development, gender, citizenship and transnational migration among Chinese singletons and their children. She is the author of Only Hope: Coming of Age under China's One-Child Policy (Stanford University Press, 2004).

GAO XIAOXIAN is secretary general of the Shaanxi Research Association for Women and Family, a non-governmental women's organization set up in 1986. Born in 1948, she trained in history and sociology and works as an official in the Shaanxi Provincial Women's Federation. Gao was a pivotal figure in establishing the Shaanxi Research Association for Women and Family, and since then has managed many research and activist projects to empower rural women in the west region of China. Gao has also been involved in rural development projects, particularly concerning rural girls' education and rural women's political participation.

ELLEN R. JUDD is a distinguished professor in the department of anthropology at the University of Manitoba. She is continuing her work on gender and mobility in rural west China, and currently extending this to an exploration in the political economy of care, investigating the means through which trans-local migrants care for their own and their families' health and well-being.

SUNG WON KIM is a doctoral student at the Harvard Graduate School of Education, concentrating on human development and education. She is interested in the transmission of parenting beliefs, parental involvement, fatherhood, and in the academic resilience of children in different cultural contexts. She graduated from Oxford University with a BA in Chinese studies and taught English for six months in Beijing.

ZUHONG LU is professor and director of the Research Center for Learning Science, Southeast University in Nanjing, China.

KIMBERLEY ENS MANNING is assistant professor in the department of political science, Concordia University. She is co-editor (with Felix Wemheuer) of Eating Bitterness: New Perspectives on China's Great Leap Forward and Famine (UBC Press, 2010).

SHANNON MAY is a PhD candidate in the department of anthropology at the University of California, Berkeley. She has conducted fieldwork throughout

viii Gender in Flux

China and in Sub-Saharan Africa; her recent research and publications focus on political ecology, household economics, governance, design and development.

JULIA C. STRAUSS is the editor of The China Quarterly and senior lecturer in Chinese politics at the School of Oriental and African Studies.

DANNING WANG received her doctoral degree in anthropology from the City University of New York. She is now teaching, as an instructor, in the anthropology department at the Chinese University of Hong Kong. Her research specialty is in the field of urban studies, applied anthropology, and the study of gender and family issues in China. Her current research project is to edit a collection volume with two colleagues at CUHK on Gender and Family in East Asia.

WANG ZHENG is associate professor of women's studies and history at the University of Michigan. She is the author of Women in the Chinese Enlightenment: Oral and Textual Histories (University of California Press, 1999), and co-editor of Some of Us: Chinese Women Growing Up on the Mao Era (Rutgers University Press, 2001) and Translating Feminisms in China (Blackwell Publishing, 2007). She is the founder and co-director of the UM–Fudan Joint Institute for Gender Studies at Fudan University, Shanghai.

NIOBE WAY is professor of applied psychology at New York University.

HIROKAZU YOSHIKAWA is professor of education at the Harvard Graduate School of Education. He conducts research on early childhood development, immigration and public policy in the United States, China and Chile.
