

Synopsis

I	Outline of evolution leading to the advent of Man in the physical world	3
II	The questioning voice, 'What doest thou here'?	7
III	Changing views of the scope of physical theory and the ideal of physical explanation	8
IV	Both a scientific and a mystical outlook are involved in the 'problem of experience'	13
V	The irrelevancy of 'natural law' to some aspects of mind and consciousness	17
VI	The importance of 'significances' and the consequences of ruling them outside the scope of inquiry	20
VII	Assurance of the revelation of God rather than of the existence of God is demanded	23
VIII	In everyday life (both material and spiritual) scientific analysis supplements but must not supplant a familiar outlook	27
IX	The spirit of Seeking in science and in religion	30