

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-00413-8 - The Constitution of Man: Considered in Relation to External Objects

George Combe

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

ON NATURAL LAWS, - - - - - 1

CHAPTER II.

OF THE CONSTITUTION OF MAN, AND ITS RELATIONS
TO EXTERNAL OBJECTS, - - - - 22

SECT. I. Man considered as a Physical Being, - 24

II. Man considered as an Organised Being, - 27

III. Man considered as an Animal—Moral—and Intellectual Being, - - - - 34IV. The Faculties of Man compared with each other; or the supremacy of the Moral Sentiments and Intellect, - - - 39V. The Faculties of Man compared with External Objects, - - - - 64VI. On the sources of Human Happiness, and the conditions requisite for maintaining it, 73VII. Application of the Natural Laws to the practical arrangements of Life, - - 92

CHAPTER III.

TO WHAT EXTENT ARE THE MISERIES OF MANKIND
REFERABLE TO INFRINGEMENTS OF THE LAWS OF NATURE, - - - - 101SECT. I. Calamities arising from infringements of the Physical Laws, - - - - ib.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-00413-8 - The Constitution of Man: Considered in Relation to External Objects

George Combe

Table of Contents

More information

xii

CONTENTS.

	Page.
SECT. II. On the Evils that befall Mankind, from infringement of the Organic Laws,	108
III. Calamities arising from infringement of the Moral Law, - - - - -	202
IV. Moral advantages of Punishment, - -	255

CHAPTER IV.

ON THE COMBINED OPERATION OF THE NATURAL LAWS,	260
CONCLUSION, - - - - -	288

APPENDIX.

NOTE I. Natural Laws, - - - - -	297
II. Organic Law, - - - - -	302
III. Death—Decreasing Mortality, - -	308
IV. Moral Law, - - - - -	313