

Contents

John Ray by W. Faithorne and G. Vertue	Frontispiece
Preface	page ix
Introduction	xiii
Sources	xiii
Epitome of Ray’s Life	xv
Chapter
I Boyhood and Youth	i
Note:
The Rays in the Register at Black Notley	19
II At Cambridge University	21
Ray’s Latin poems	39
III First Studies in Science	43
Ray’s pupils at Trinity	71
IV The Cambridge Catalogue	72
Ray’s garden in Trinity College	108
V The Years of Travel	111
Ray’s Herbarium	140
VI The English Catalogue	142
The topography of Ray’s journeys	160
VII The Years of Varied Output	163
Ray’s house called Dewlands	179
VIII The Structure and Classification of Plants	181
Ray’s relations with Nehemiah Grew	200
IX The History of Plants	202
Ray’s wine-list	241
X The Flora of Britain	243
Localities at Black Notley	270
XI Last Work in Botany	271
Ray and Linnaeus	306
XII The Ornithology	308
Ray and Willughby	334
Sir Thomas Browne on Birds	337

viii	CONTENTS
Chapter		page
XIII The History of Fishes		339
Note:
The Smelts of Rostherne Mere		369
The pictures of Fishes		370
XIV Of Mammals and Reptiles		371
XV The History of Insects		388
Ray and the case of Lady Glanville		417
XVI Of Fossils and Geology		419
The controversy about Woodward's book		449
XVII The Wisdom of God		452
Ray's scientific genius		478
Conclusion		481
Index		483