

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01161-7 - The Second Part of the Chronicle of Peru

Pedro de Cieza de Leon

Table of Contents

More information

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

DEDICATION TO GENERAL CACERES	xiii
INTRODUCTION	xv
Note on the ancient Ynca Drama	xxix
Peruvian Love Story	lv
Fragment of Chapter III	1
CHAP. IV.—Which treats of what the Indians of this kingdom say touching the state of things before the Incas were known, and how they had fortresses in the hills, whence they came forth to make war one with another	2
CHAP. V.—Touching what these natives say concerning the Ticivira-cocha; of the opinion held by some that an Apostle passed through this land, and of the temple there is in Cáchan; also what happened there	5
CHAP. VI.—How certain men and women appeared in Pacarec Tampu, and what they relate touching their proceedings after they came forth from there	11
CHAP. VII.—How the brothers, being in Tampu-Quiru, beheld him whom they had shut up in the cave by deceit, come forth with wings; and how he told them that he went to found the great city of Cuzco; and how they departed from Tampu-Quiru	16
CHAP. VIII.—How Manco Capac, when he saw that his brothers had been turned into stones, went to a valley where he met some people; and how he founded and built the ancient and very rich city of Cuzco, which was the capital of the whole empire of the Incas	22
CHAP. IX.—In which notice is given to the reader of the reason that the author, leaving the account of the succession of the kings, prefers to explain the government of the people, their laws, and customs	24
CHAP. X.—How the lord, after he had assumed the fringe of sovereignty, was married to his sister the Coya, which is the name of the Queen, and how it was permitted that he should have many women, although among them all the Coya alone was the legitimate and principal wife	26

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01161-7 - The Second Part of the Chronicle of Peru

Pedro de Cieza de Leon

Table of Contents

More information

viii

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

CHAP. XI.—How it was the custom among the Incas that they celebrated in their songs, and by making statues of those who were valorous and extended the bounds of the empire, and performed any other deed worthy of memory; while those who were negligent or cowardly received little notice	28
CHAP. XII.—How they had chroniclers to record their deeds, and of the QUIPOS, what they were, and what we see of them	32
CHAP. XIII.—How the lords of Peru were beloved on the one hand, and feared on the other, by all their subjects; and how no one, even a great lord of very ancient lineage, could come into the presence, except with a burden, in token of great obedience	36
CHAP. XIV.—How the riches possessed by the king were very great, and how the sons of the lord were ordered always to be in attendance at court	39
CHAP. XV.—How they built the edifices for the lords, and the royal road along which to travel over the kingdom	42
CHAP. XVI.—How and in what manner they made the royal hunts for the lords of Peru	45
CHAP. XVII.—Which treats of the order maintained by the Incas, and how in many parts they made the waste places fertile, by the arrangements they made for that purpose	47
CHAP. XVIII.—Which treats of the order they adopted in the payments of tribute by the provinces to the kings, and of the system by which the tribute was regulated	51
CHAP. XIX.—How the kings of Cuzco ordered that every year an account should be taken of all persons who died and were born throughout their dominions; also how all men worked, and how none could be poor by reason of the storehouses	57
CHAP. XX.—How governors were appointed to the provinces; and of the manner in which the kings visited their dominions, and how they bore, for their arms, certain waving serpents with sticks	59
CHAP. XXI.—How the posts of the kingdom were arranged	64
CHAP. XXII.—How the Mitimaes were established, and of the different kinds of them, and how they were highly esteemed by the Incas	67
CHAP. XXIII.—Of the great preparations that were made when the lords set out from Cuzco on warlike expeditions; and how robbers were punished	72

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01161-7 - The Second Part of the Chronicle of Peru

Pedro de Cieza de Leon

Table of Contents

More information

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ix

CHAP. XXIV.—How the Incas ordered the people to form settled towns, dividing the lands concerning which there was any dispute, and how it was ordered that all should speak the language of Cuzco	75
CHAP. XXV.—How the Incas were free from the abominable sin, and from other evil customs which have been seen to prevail in the world among other princes	78
CHAP. XXVI.—How the Incas employed councillors and executors of justice, and of their method of reckoning time	81
CHAP. XXVII.—Which treats of the riches of the temple of Curi-cancha, and of the veneration in which the Incas held it	83
CHAP. XXVIII.—Which treats of the other principal temples, and of their names	87
CHAP. XXIX.—How the Capacocha was made, and to what extent it was practised by the Incas ; by which is to be understood the gifts and offerings that were made to idols	91
CHAP. XXX.—How they made great festivities and sacrifices at the grand and solemn feast called Hatun Raymi	94
CHAP. XXXI.—Of the second king or Inca who reigned in Cuzco, named Sinchi Roca	99
CHAP. XXXII.—Of the third king who reigned in Cuzco, named Lloque Yupanqui	102
CHAP. XXXIII.—Of the fourth king who reigned at Cuzco, named Mayta Capac, and of what happened during his reign	105
CHAP. XXXIV.—Of the fifth king who reigned at Cuzco, named Capac Yupanqui	107
CHAP. XXXV.—Of the sixth king who reigned in Cuzco, and of what happened in his time ; and of the fable or history they relate touching the river that passes through the midst of the city of Cuzco	111
CHAP. XXXVI.—Of the seventh king or Inca who reigned in Cuzco, named Inca Yupanqui	115
CHAP. XXXVII.—How, when this Inca wanted to make war in the province of Collao, a certain disturbance arose in Cuzco ; and how the Chancas conquered the Quichuas, and got possession of their dominions	117
CHAP. XXXVIII.—How the Orejones considered who should be Inca, and what passed until Viracocha Inca assumed the fringe, who was the eighth Inca that reigned	120

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01161-7 - The Second Part of the Chronicle of Peru

Pedro de Cieza de Leon

Table of Contents

More information

X	TABLE OF CONTENTS.
CHAP. XXXIX.—How Viracocha Inca threw a stone of fire with a sling at Caitamarca, and how they made reverence	-	124
CHAP. XL.—How a tyrant rose up in Cuzco, and of the disturbance he caused. Of the chastisement of certain Mamaconas for having, contrary to their religion, used their bodies uncleanly; and how Viracocha returned to Cuzco	-	127
CHAP. XLI.—How ambassadors from the tyrants of Collao came to Cuzco, and of the departure of Viracocha Inca for the Collao	-	130
CHAP. XLII.—How Viracocha Inca passed by the province of the Canches and Canas, and marched until he entered the territory of the Collao, and of what happened between Cari and Zapana	-	133
CHAP. XLIII.—How Cari returned to Chucuito; of the arrival of the Inca Viracocha; and of the peace that was agreed to between them	-	136
CHAP. XLIV.—How Inca Urco was received as supreme ruler of the whole empire, and assumed the crown at Cuzco, and how the Chancas determined to come forth and make war on those of Cuzco	-	138
CHAP. XLV.—How the Chancas arrived at the city of Cuzco and pitched their camp there, and of the terror of the inhabitants, and the great valour of Inca Yupanqui	-	141
CHAP. XLVI.—How Inca Yupanqui was received as king, the name of Inca being taken from Inca Urco; and how the new sovereign made a peace with Hastu Huaraca	-	144
CHAP. XLVII.—How Inca Yupanqui set out from Cuzco, leaving Lloque Yupanqui as Governor, and of what happened	-	147
CHAP. XLVIII.—How the Inca returned to Vilcas, and besieged the rocky fastness where the enemy had taken refuge	-	150
CHAP. XLIX.—How Inca Yupanqui ordered Lloque Yupanqui to proceed to the valley of Xauxa, and to bring under his dominion the Huancas and the Yauyos, their neighbours, with other nations in that direction	-	153
CHAP. L.—How the captains of the Inca left Xauxa, and what happened; and how Ancoallo departed from among them	-	156
CHAP. LI.—How the Royal House of the Sun was founded on a hill overlooking Cuzco towards the north, which the Spaniards usually call the Fortress; and its wonderful construction, and the size of the stones that are to be seen there	-	160
CHAP. LII.—How Inca Yupanqui set out from Cuzco and marched to the Collao, and of what happened there	-	165

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01161-7 - The Second Part of the Chronicle of Peru

Pedro de Cieza de Leon

Table of Contents

More information

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xi

CHAP. LIII.—How Inca Yupanqui set out from Cuzco, and what he did	168
CHAP. LIV.—How the Inca Yupanqui, having grown very old, resigned the government of the kingdom to Tupac Inca, his son	171
CHAP. LV.—How the Collas asked for peace, and how the Inca granted it and returned to Cuzco	174
CHAP. LVI.—How Tupac Inca Yupanqui set out from Cuzco, and how he conquered all the country from thence to Quito; and touching his great deeds	177
CHAP. LVII.—How the Inca sent from Quito to know whether his commands had been obeyed, and how, leaving that province in good order, he set out to go to the valleys of the Yuncas	182
CHAP. LVIII.—How Tupac Inca Yupanqui marched by the coast valleys, and how all the Yuncas came under his dominion	185
CHAP. LIX.—How Tupac Inca again set out from Cuzco, and of the fierce war he waged with those of Huarco; and how, after he had conquered them, he returned to Cuzco	189
CHAP. LX.—How Tupac Inca once more set out from Cuzco, and how he went to the Collao and from thence to Chile, subjugating the nations in that direction; and of his death	194
CHAP. LXI.—How Huayna Capac reigned in Cuzco, who was the twelfth King Inca	197
CHAP. LXII.—How Huayna Capac departed from Cuzco, and what he did	199
CHAP. LXIII.—How Huayna Capac again ordered that an army should be assembled, and how he set out for Quito	204
CHAP. LXIV.—How Huayna Capac entered the country of the Bracamoros, and returned flying, and of the other events that happened until he arrived at Quito	208
CHAP. LXV.—How Huayna Capac marched through the coast valleys, and what he did	211
CHAP. LXVI.—How, when Huayna Capac was about to march from Quito, he sent forward certain of his captains, who returned flying before the enemy, and what he did in consequence	214
CHAP. LXVII.—How Huayna Capac assembled all his power, gave battle to his enemies, and defeated them; and of the great cruelty with which he treated them	217

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01161-7 - The Second Part of the Chronicle of Peru

Pedro de Cieza de Leon

Table of Contents

More information

xii

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

CHAP. LXVIII.—How the King Huayna Capac returned to Quito ; and how he knew of the arrival of the Spaniards on the coast ; and of his death	- - - - -	220
CHAP. LXIX.—Of the lineage and character of Huascar and Atahualpa	- - - - -	224
CHAP. LXX.—How Huascar was acknowledged as king in Cuzco, after the death of his father	- - - - -	226
CHAP. LXXI.—How the differences between Huascar and Atahualpa began, and how great battles were fought between them	- - - - -	229
CHAP. LXXII.—How Atahualpa set out from Quito with his army and captains, and how he gave battle to Atoc in the villages of Ambato	- - - - -	231
CHAP. LXXIII.—How Huascar sent new captains and troops against his enemy ; and how Atahualpa arrived at Tumebamba, where he per- petrated great cruelties ; also what happened between him and the captains of Huascar	- - - - -	233

INDEX.

Names of Places and Tribes	- - - - -	237
Quichua words	- - - - -	240
Names of Indians and Gods	- - - - -	242
Names of Spaniards	- - - - -	244
General Index	- - - - -	245

[In the Index, “i” refers to the volume containing the First Part of the Chronicle of Cieza de Leon ; and “ii”, to the present volume.]