

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

(iii)

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

CHAPTER XXXI.

MENEXENUS.

	Page		Page
Persons and situation of the dialogue	1	to the established type—Topics on which he insists	5
Funeral harangue at Athens—Choice of a public orator—Sokrates declares the task of the public orator to be easy—Comic exaggeration of the effects of the harangue	ib.	Consolation and exhortation to surviving relatives	7
Sokrates professes to have learnt a funeral harangue from Aspasia, and to be competent to recite it himself. Menexenus entreats him to do so	2	Admiration felt for this harangue, both at the time and afterwards	ib.
Harangue recited by Sokrates	3	Probable motives of Plato in composing it, shortly after he established himself at Athens as a teacher—His competition with Lysias—Desire for celebrity both as rhetor and as dialectician	8
Compliments of Menexenus after Sokrates has finished, both to the harangue itself and to Aspasia	ib.	Menexenus compared with the view of rhetoric presented in the Gorgias—Necessity for an orator to conform to established sentiments	9
Supposed period—shortly after the peace of Antalkidas	4	Colloquial portion of the Menexenus is probably intended as ridicule and sneer at Rhetoric—The harangue itself is serious, and intended as an evidence of Plato's ability	10
Custom of Athens about funeral harangues. Many such harangues existed at Athens, composed by distinguished orators or logographers—Established type of the harangue	ib.	Anachronism of the Menexenus—Plato careless on this point	11
Plato in this harangue conforms

CHAPTER XXXII.

KLEITOPHON.

Persons and circumstances of Kleitophon	13	presses gratitude and admiration for the benefit which he has derived from long companionship with Sokrates	14
Conversation of Sokrates with Kleitophon alone: he alludes to observations of an unfavourable character recently made by Kleitophon, who asks permission to explain	ib.	The observations made by Sokrates have been most salutary and stimulating in awakening ardour for virtue. Arguments and analogies commonly used by Sokrates	ib. Explanation given. Kleitophon ex-

a 2

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

iv

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

CHAPTER XXXII.—continued.

	Page		Page
But Sokrates does not explain what virtue is, nor how it is to be attained. Kleitophon has had enough of stimulus, and now wants information how he is to act	15	with Kritias, the other fragment	19
Questions addressed by Kleitophon with this view, both to the companions of Sokrates and to Sokrates himself	16	Kleitophon is genuine, and perfectly in harmony with a just theory of Plato	20
Replies made by the friends of Sokrates unsatisfactory	ib.	It could not have been published until after Plato's death	ib.
None of them could explain what the special work of justice or virtue was	17	Reasons why the Kleitophon was never finished. It points out the defects of Sokrates, just as he himself confesses them in the Apology	21
Kleitophon at length asked the question from Sokrates himself. But Sokrates did not answer clearly. Kleitophon believes that Sokrates knows, but will not tell	ib.	The same defects also confessed in many of the Platonic and Xenophontic dialogues	22
Kleitophon is on the point of leaving Sokrates and going to Thrasymachus. But before leaving he addresses one last entreaty, that Sokrates will speak out clearly and explicitly	18	Forcible, yet respectful, manner in which these defects are set forth in the Kleitophon. Impossible to answer them in such a way as to hold out against the negative Elenchus of a Sokratic pupil	23
Remarks on the Kleitophon. Why Thrasyllus placed it in the eighth Tetralogy immediately before the Republic, and along		The Kleitophon represents a point of view which many objectors must have insisted on against Sokrates and Plato	24
		The Kleitophon was originally intended as a first book of the Republic, but was found too hard to answer. Reasons why the existing first book was substituted	25

CHAPTER XXXIII.

PLATONIC REPUBLIC—ABSTRACT.

Declared theme of the Republic—Expansion and multiplication of the topics connected with it	27	ing property guarded, must also be good for stealing property—Analogies cited	31
Personages of the dialogue	28	Justice consists in doing good to friends, evil to enemies—But how, if a man mistakes who his friends are, and makes friends of bad men?	32
Views of Kephalus about old age	ib.	Justice consists in doing good to your friend, if really a good man: hurt to your enemy, with the like proviso. Sokrates affirms that the just man will do no hurt to any one. Definition of Simonides rejected	ib.
Definition of Justice by Simonides—It consists in rendering to every man what is owing to him	ib.	Thrasymachus takes up the dialogue—Repulsive portrait drawn of him	33
Objections to it by Sokrates—There are cases in which it is not right to restore what is owing, or to tell the truth	29	Violence of Thrasymachus—Sub-
Explanation by Polemarchus—Further interrogations by Sokrates—Justice renders what is proper and suitable: but how? in what cases, proper? Under what circumstances is Justice useful?	30
The just man, being good for keep-

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

v

CHAPTER XXXIII.—continued.

Page		Page
	dued manner of Sokrates—Conditions of useful colloquy	33
	Definition given by Thrasymachus —Justice is that which is advantageous to the more powerful.
	Comments by Sokrates. What if the powerful man mistakes
	his own advantage?	34
	Correction by Thrasymachus—If the Ruler mistakes, he is pro
	tanto no Ruler—The Ruler, quâ Ruler— quâ Craftsman—is infallible	35
	Reply by Sokrates—The Ruler, quâ infallible Craftsman, studies the interest of those whom he governs, and not his own interest	ib.
	Thrasymachus denies this—Justice is the good of another. The just many are worse off than the unjust One, and are forced to submit to his superior strength Position laid for the subsequent debate and exposition	36
	Arguments of Sokrates—Injustice is a source of weakness—Every multitude must observe justice among themselves, in order to avoid perpetual quarrels. The same about any single individual: if he is unjust, he will be at war with himself, and perpetually weak	ib.
	Farther argument of Sokrates—
	The just man is happy, the unjust man miserable—Thrasymachus is confuted and silenced.
	Sokrates complains that he does not yet know what Justice is . .	38
	Glaukon intimates that he is not satisfied with the proof, though he agrees in the opinion expressed by Sokrates. Tripartite distribution of Good—To which of the three heads does Justice belong?	ib.
	Glaukon undertakes to set forth the case against Sokrates, though professing not to agree with it Pleading of Glaukon. Justice is in the nature of a compromise for all—a medium between what is best and what is worst	ib. Comparison of the happiness of the just man derived from his justice alone, when others are unjust to him, with that of the unjust man under parallel circumstances	40
	Pleading of Adeimantus on the same side. He cites advice given by fathers to their sons, recommending just behaviour
	by reason of its consequences . .	41
	Nobody recommends Justice per se , but only by reason of its consequences	43
	Adeimantus calls upon Sokrates to recommend and enforce Justice on its own grounds, and to explain how Justice in itself
	benefits the mind of the just man	ib. Relation of Glaukon and Adei-
	mantus to Thrasymachus	44
	Statement of the question as it stands after the speeches of Glaukon and Adeimantus. What
	Sokrates undertakes to prove . .	45
	Position to be proved by Sokrates —Justice makes the just man happy per se , whatever be its results	46
	Argument of Sokrates to show what Justice is—Assumed analogy between the city and the individual	ib. Fundamental principle, to which communities of mankind owe their origin—Reciprocity of want and service between individuals—No individual can suffice to himself	47
	Moderate equipment of a sound
	and healthy city—Few wants . .	48
	Enlargement of the city—Multiplied wants and services. First origin of war and strife with neighbours—It arises out of these multiplied wants	ib. Separate class of soldiers or Guardians. One man cannot do well more than one business. Character required in the Guardians
	—Mildness at home with pug-
	nacity against enemies	49
	Peculiar education necessary, musical as well as gymnastical . .	50
	Musical education, by fictions as well as by truth. Fictions adressed to the young: the religious legends now circulating are often pernicious: censorship necessary	ib.

VOL. III.

b

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

vi

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

CHAPTER XXXIII.—continued.

Page	Page
Orthodox type to be laid down: all poets are required to conform their legends to it. The Gods are causes of nothing but good: therefore they are causes of few things. Great preponderance of actual evil	50	Complete unity of the city, every man performing his own special function	59
The Guardians must not fear death. No terrible descriptions of Hades must be presented to them: no intense sorrow, nor violent nor sensual passion, must be recounted either of Gods or Heroes	51	The maintenance of the city depends upon that of the habits, character, and education of the Guardians	60
Type for all narratives respecting men	52	Religious legislation—Consult the Delphian Apollo	ib.
Style of narratives. The poet must not practise variety of imitation: he must not speak in the name of bad characters . .	ib.	The city is now constituted as a good city—that is, wise, courageous, temperate, just. Where is its Justice?	ib.
Rhythm and Melody regulated. None but simple and grave music allowed: only the Dorian and Phrygian moods, with the lyre and harp	53	First, where is the wisdom of the city? It resides in the few elder Rulers	61
Effect of musical training of the mind—makes youth love the Beautiful and hate the Ugly . .	54	Where is the Courage? In the body of Guardians or Soldiers . .	ib.
Training of the body—simple and sober. No refined medical art allowed. Wounds or temporary ailments treated; but sickly frames cannot be kept alive . .	ib.	Where is the Temperance? It resides in all and each, Rulers, Guardians, and People. Superiors rule and Inferiors obey . .	ib.
Value of Gymnastic in imparting courage to the mind—Gymnastic and Music necessary to correct each other	55	Where is the Justice? In all and each of them also. It consists in each performing his own special function, and not meddling with the function of the others .	62
Out of the Guardians a few of the very best must be chosen as Elders or Rulers—highly educated and severely tested	56	Injustice arises when any one part of the city interferes with the functions of the other part, or undertakes double functions . .	63
Fundamental creed required to be planted in the minds of all the citizens, respecting their breed and relationship	ib.	Analogy of the city to the individual—Each man is tripartite, having in his mind Reason, Energy, Appetite. These three elements are distinct, and often conflicting	64
How is such a fiction to be accredited in the first instance? Difficulty extreme, of first beginning; but if once accredited, it will easily transmit itself by tradition	57	Reason, Energy, Appetite, in the individual—analogous to Rulers, Guardians, Craftsmen in the city. Reason is to rule Appetite. Energy assists Reason in ruling it	65
Guardians to reside in barracks and mess together; to have no private property or home; to be maintained by contribution from the people	58	A man is just when these different parts of his mind exercise their appropriate functions without hindrance	66
If the Guardians fail in these precautions, and acquire private interests, the city will be ruined	59	Justice and Injustice in the mind—what health and disease are in the body	ib.
		Original question now resumed—Does Justice make a man happy, and Injustice make him miserable, apart from all consequences? Answer—Yes	67
		Glaukon requires farther explanation about the condition of the Guardians, in regard to sexual and family ties	ib.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

vii

CHAPTER XXXIII.—continued.

Page	Page
Men and women will live together and perform the duties of Guardians alike—They will receive the same gymnastic and musical training	67	minds are always fluctuating among particulars	77
Nature does not prescribe any distribution of functions between men and women. Women are inferior to men in every thing. The best women are equal to second-best men	68	The philosopher will be ardent for all varieties of knowledge—His excellent moral attributes—He will be trained to capacity for active life	ib.
Community of life and relations between the male and female Guardians. Temporary marriages arranged by contrivance of the Elders. No separate families	69	Adeimantus does not dispute the conclusion, but remarks that it is at variance with actual facts—Existing philosophers are either worthless pretenders, or when they are good, useless	78
Regulations about age, for procreation—Children brought up under public authority	70	Sokrates admits the fact to be so—His simile of the able steersman on shipboard, among a disobedient crew	79
Perfect communion of sentiment and interest among the Guardians—Causes of pleasure and pain the same to all, like parts of the same organism	71	The uselessness of the true philosopher is the fault of the citizen, who will not invoke his guidance	80
Harmony—absence of conflicting interest—assured scale of equal comfort—consequent happiness—among the Guardians	ib.	The great qualities required to form a philosopher, become sources of perversion, under a misleading public opinion	81
In case of war both sexes will go together to battle—Rewards to distinguished warriors	72	Mistake of supposing that such perversion arises from the Sophists. Irresistible effect of the public opinion generally, in tempting or forcing a dissenter into orthodoxy	ib.
War against Hellenic enemies to be carried on mildly—Hellenes are all by nature kinsmen	73	The Sophists and other private teachers accept the prevalent orthodoxy, and conform their teaching to it	82
Question—How is the scheme practicable? It is difficult, yet practicable on one condition—That philosophy and political power should come into the same hands	ib.	The people generally hate philosophy—A youth who aspires to it will be hated by the people, and persecuted even by his own relatives	83
Characteristic marks of the philosopher—He contemplates and knows Entia or unchangeable Forms, as distinguished from fluctuating particulars or Fientia	74	The really great minds are thus driven away from the path of philosophy— which is left to empty pretenders	84
Ens alone can be known—Non-Ens is unknowable. That which is midway between Ens and Non-Ens (particulars) is matter only of opinion. Ordinary men attain nothing beyond opinion	75	Rare cases in which a highly qualified philosopher remains—Being at variance with public opinion, he can achieve nothing, and is lucky if he can obtain safety by silence	85
Particulars fluctuate: they are sometimes just or beautiful, sometimes unjust or ugly. Forms or Entia alone remain constant	76	The philosopher must have a community suitable to him, and worthy of him	86
The many cannot discern or admit the reality of Forms—Their		It must be such a community as Sokrates has been describing— But means must be taken to keep up a perpetual succession of philosophers as Rulers	ib.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

viii

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

CHAPTER XXXIII.—continued.

Page	Page
Proper manner of teaching philosophy—Not to begin at a very early age	86	eternal Forms, must be forced to come down again and undertake active duties—Their reluctance to do this	96
If the multitude could once see a real, perfect, philosopher, they could not fail to love him: but this never happens	87	Studies serving as introduction to philosophy—Arithmetic, its awakening power—shock to the mind by felt contradiction	97
Course of training in the Platonic city, for imparting philosophy to the Rulers. They must be taught to ascend to the Idea of Good. But what is Good?	88	Perplexity arising from the One and Many, stimulates the mind to an intellectual effort for clearing it up	98
Ancient disputes upon this point, though every one years after Good. Some say Intelligence; some say Pleasure. Neither is satisfactory	ib.	Geometry conducts the mind towards Universal Ens	99
Adeimantus asks what Sokrates says. Sokrates says that he cannot answer: but he compares it by a metaphor to the Sun	89	Astronomy—how useful—not useful as now taught—must be studied by ideal figures, not by observation	ib.
The Idea of Good rules the ideal or intelligible world, as the Sun rules the sensible or visible world	90	Acoustics, in like manner—The student will be thus conducted to the highest of all studies—Dialectic; and to the region of pure intelligible Forms	100
To the intelligible world there are applicable two distinct modes of procedure—the Geometrical—the Dialectic. Geometrical procedure assumes diagrams	91	Question by Glaukon—What is the Dialectic Power? Sokrates declares that he cannot answer with certainty, and that Glaukon could not follow him if he did	101
Dialectic procedure assumes nothing. It departs from the highest Form, and steps gradually down to the lowest, without meddling with any thing except Forms	92	He answers partially—It is the consummation of all the sciences, raising the student to the contemplation of pure Forms, and especially to that of the highest Form— Good	ib.
Two distinct grades of Cognition—Direct or Superior— Nous —Indirect or Inferior— Dianoia	93	The Synoptic view peculiar to the Dialectician	102
Two distinct grades of Opinion also in the Sensible World—Faith or Belief—Conjecture	ib.	Scale and duration of various studies for the Guardians, from youth upwards	ib.
Distinction between the philosopher and the unphilosophical public, illustrated by the simile of the Cave, and the captives imprisoned therein	ib.	All these studies, and this education, are common to females as well as males	104
Daylight of philosophy contrasted with the firelight and shadows of the Cave	95	First formation of the Platonic city—how brought about: difficult, but not impossible	ib.
Purpose of a philosophical training, to turn a man round from facing the bad light of the Cave to face the daylight of philosophy, and to see the eternal Forms	ib.	The city thus formed will last long, but not for ever. After a certain time, it will begin to degenerate. Stages of its degeneracy	ib.
Those who have emerged from the Cave into full daylight amidst		1. Timocracy and the timocratical individual. 2. Oligarchy, and the oligarchical individual	105
		3. Democracy, and the democratical individual	106
		4. Passage from democracy to despotism. Character of the despotic city	107

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

ix

CHAPTER XXXIII.—continued.

Page	Page
Despotic individual corresponding to that city	108	fuller pleasure than replenishment of the body	114
The city has thus passed, by four stages, from best to worse. Question—How are Happiness and Misery apportioned among them?	109	Comparative worthlessness of the pleasures of Appetite and Ambition, when measured against those of Intelligence	115
Misery of the despotised city	ib.	The Just Man will be happy from his justice—He will look only to the good order of his own mind—He will stand aloof from public affairs, in cities as now constituted	116
Supreme Misery of the despotising individual	ib.	Tenth Book—Censure of the poets is renewed—Mischiefs of imitation generally, as deceptive—Imitation from imitation	117
Conclusion—The Model city and the individual corresponding to it, are the happiest of all—That which is farthest removed from it, is the most miserable of all	110	Censure of Homer—He is falsely extolled as educator of the Hellenic world. He and other poets only deceive their hearers	118
The Just Man is happy in and through his Justice, however he may be treated by others. The Unjust Man, miserable	ib.	The poet chiefly appeals to emotions—Mischiefs of such eloquent appeals, as disturbing the rational government of the mind	119
Other arguments proving the same conclusion—Pleasures of Intelligence are the best of all pleasures	111	Ancient quarrel between philosophy and poetry—Plato fights for philosophy, though his feelings are strongly enlisted for poetry	120
They are the only pleasures completely true and pure. Comparison of pleasure and pain with neutrality. Prevalent illusions	112	Immortality of the soul affirmed and sustained by argument—Total number of souls always the same	ib.
Most men know nothing of true and pure pleasure. Simile of the Kosmos—Absolute height and depth	113	Recapitulation—The Just Man will be happy, both from his justice and from its consequences, both here and hereafter	ib.
Nourishment of the mind partakes more of real essence than nourishment of the body—Replenishment of the mind imparts

CHAPTER XXXIV.

REPUBLIC—REMARKS ON ITS MAIN THESIS.

Summary of the preceding chapter	122	Pleadings of Glaukon and Adeimantus	126
Title of the Republic, of ancient date, but only a partial indication of its contents	ib.	The arguments which they enforce were not invented by the Sophists, but were the received views anterior to Plato	127
Parallelism between the Commonwealth and the Individual	123	Argument of Sokrates to refute them. Sentiments in which it originates. Panegyric on Justice	128
Each of them a whole, composed of parts distinct in function, and unequal in merit	124	Different senses of justice—wider and narrower sense	129
End proposed by Plato. Happiness of the commonwealth. Happiness of the individual. Conditions of happiness	125	Plato's sense of the word Justice or Virtue—self-regarding	131
Peculiar view of Justice taken by Plato	126	He represents the motives to it, as

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

x

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

CHAPTER XXXIV.—continued.

	Page		Page
arising from the internal happiness of the just agents	132	Second Argument of Plato to prove the happiness of the just man—He now recalls his previous concession, and assumes that the just man will receive just treatment and esteem from others ..	148
His theory departs more widely from the truth than that which he opposes. Argument of Adeimantus discussed	133	Dependence of the happiness of the individual on the society in which he is placed	150
Reciprocity of rights and duties between men in social life—different feelings towards one and towards the other	136	Inconsistency of affirming general positions respecting the happiness of the just man, in all societies without distinction ..	151
Plato's own theory, respecting the genesis of society, is based on reciprocity	137	Qualified sense in which only this can be done	152
Antithesis and correlation of obligation and right. Necessity of keeping the two ideas together, as the basis of any theory respecting society	139	Question—Whether the just man is orthodox or dissenter in his society?—important in discussing whether he is happy ..	153
Characteristic feature of the Platonic Commonwealth—specialization of services to that function for which each man is fit—will not apply to one individual separately	141	Comparison of the position of Sokrates at Athens, with that of his accusers	ib.
Plato has not made good his refutation—the thesis which he impugns is true	143	Imperfect ethical basis on which Plato has conducted the discussion in the Republic	154
Statement of the real issue between him and his opponents	ib.	Plato in Republic is preacher, inculcating useful beliefs—not philosopher, establishing scientific theory. State of Just and Unjust Man in the Platonic Commonwealth	156
He himself misrepresents this issue—he describes his opponents as enemies of justice	144	Comparative happiness of the two in actual communities. Plato is dissatisfied with it—This is his motive for recasting society on his own principles	157
Farther arguments of Plato in support of his thesis. Comparison of three different characters of men	145	Confusion between the preacher and the philosopher in the Platonic Republic	158
His arguments do not go to the point which he professes to aim at	147	Remarks on the contrast between ethical theory and ethical precepts	ib.
Exaggerated parallelism between the Commonwealth and the individual man	ib.

CHAPTER XXXV.

REPUBLIC—REMARKS ON THE PLATONIC COMMONWEALTH.

Double purpose of the Platonic Republic—ethical and political ..	160	of Good or Virtue, where each of these virtues resides	161
Plato recognises the generating principle of human society—reciprocity of need and service. Particular direction which he gives to this principle	ib.	First mention of these, as an exhaustive classification, in ethical theory. Plato effaces the distinction between Temperance and Justice	162
The four cardinal virtues are assumed as constituting the whole		All the four are here assumed as certain and determinate, though

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

xi

CHAPTER XXXV.—continued.

Page	Page
in former dialogues they appear indeterminate and full of unsolved difficulties	164	tions. Fictions indispensable to the Platonic Commonwealth	184
Difficulties left unsolved, but overlapped by Plato	165	Difficulty of procuring first admission for fictions. Ease with which they perpetuate themselves after having been once admitted	186
Ethical and political theory combined by Plato, treated apart by Aristotle	166	Views entertained by Kritias and others, that the religious doctrines generally believed had originated with lawgivers, for useful purposes	188
Platonic Commonwealth—only an outline—partially filled up	ib.	Main points of dissent between Plato and his countrymen, in respect to religious doctrine	189
Absolute rule of a few philosophers—Careful and peculiar training of the Guardians	167	Theology of Plato compared with that of Epikurus—Neither of them satisfied the exigencies of a believing religious mind of that day	ib.
Comparison of Plato with Xenophon—Cyropædia—Æconomicus	168	Plato conceives the Gods according to the exigencies of his own mind—complete discord with those of the popular mind	191
Both of them combine polity with education—temporal with spiritual	169	Repugnance of ordinary Athenians, in regard to the criticism of Sokrates on the religious legends	193
Differences between them—Character of Cyrus	170	Aristophanes connects the idea of immorality with the freethinkers and their wicked misinterpretations	194
Xenophontic genius for command—Practical training—Socratic principles applied in Persian training	171	Heresies ascribed to Sokrates by his own friends—Unpopularity of his name from this circumstance	196
Plato does not build upon an individual hero. Platonic training compared with Xenophontic	173	Restrictions imposed by Plato upon musical modes and reciters	ib.
Platonic type of character compared with Xenophontic, is like the Athenian compared with the Spartan	175	All these restrictions intended for the emotional training of the Guardians	197
Professional soldiers are the proper modern standard of comparison with the regulations of Plato and Xenophon	176	Regulations for the life of the Guardians, especially the prohibition of separate property and family	ib.
Music and Gymnastic—multifarious and varied effects of music	ib.	Purpose of Plato in these regulations	198
Great influence of the poets and their works on education	177	Common life, education, drill, collective life, and duties, for Guardians of both sexes. Views of Plato respecting the female character and aptitudes	199
Plato's idea of the purpose which poetry and music ought to serve in education	179	His arguments against the ordinary doctrine	200
He declares war against most of the traditional and consecrated poetry, as mischievous	ib.	Opponents appealed to nature as an authority against Plato. He invokes Nature on his own side against them	201
Strict limits imposed by Plato on poets	181	Collective family relations and de-
His view of the purposes of fiction—little distinction between fiction and truth. His censures upon Homer and the tragedians	ib.
Type of character prescribed by Plato, to which all poets must conform, in tales about Gods and Heroes	183
Position of Plato as an innovator on the received faith and tradi-

CHAPTER XXXV.—continued.

	Page		Page
nominations among the Guardians	202	and wrong about sexual intercourse, but referring to different objects	220
Restrictions upon sexual intercourse—Purposes of such restrictions	203	Different sentiment which would grow up in the Platonic Commonwealth respecting the sexual relations	221
Regulations about marriages and family	204	What Nature prescribes in regard to the relations of the two sexes—Direct contradiction between Plato and Aristotle	223
Procreative powers of individual Guardians required to be held at the disposal of the rulers, for purity of breed	205	Opinion of Plato respecting the capacities of women, and the training proper for women, are maintained in the Leges , as well as in the Republic . Ancient legends harmonising with this opinion	ib.
Purpose to create an intimate and equal sympathy among all the Guardians, but to prevent exclusive sympathy of particular members	206	In a Commonwealth like the Platonic, the influence of Aphrodité would probably have been reduced to a minimum	225
Platonic scheme—partial communism	207	Other purposes of Plato—limitation of number of Guardians—common to Aristotle also	226
Soldiership as a separate profession has acquired greater development in modern times	209	Law of population expounded by Malthus—Three distinct checks to population—alternative open between preventive and positive	ib.
Spartan institutions—great impression which they produced upon speculative Greek minds	ib.	Plato and Aristotle saw the same law as Malthus, but arranged the facts under a different point of view	230
Plans of these speculative minds compared with Spartan—Different types of character contemplated	210	Regulations of Plato and Aristotle as to number of births and newborn children	ib.
Plato carries abstraction farther than Xenophon or Aristotle	211	Such regulations disapproved and forbidden by modern sentiment. Variability of ethical sentiment as to objects approved or disapproved	231
Anxiety shown by Plato for the good treatment of the Demos , greater than that shown by Xenophon and Aristotle	ib.	Plato and Aristotle required subordination of impulse to reason and duty—they applied this to the procreative impulse, as to others	233
In Aristotle's theory, the Demos are not considered as members of the Commonwealth, but as adjuncts	212	Training of the few select philosophers to act as chiefs	234
Objection urged by Aristotle against the Platonic Republic, that it will be two cities. Spiritual pride of the Guardians, contempt for the Demos	213	Comprehensive curriculum for aspirants to philosophy—consummation by means of Dialectic	ib.
Plato's scheme fails, mainly because he provides no training for the Demos	215	Valuable remarks on the effects of these preparatory studies	235
Principle of Aristotle—That every citizen belongs to the city, not to himself—applied by Plato to women	ib.	Differences between the Republic and other dialogues—no mention of reminiscence nor of the Elenchus	236
Aristotle declares the Platonic Commonwealth impossible—In what sense this is true	218	Different view taken by Plato in
The real impossibility of the Platonic Commonwealth, arises from the fact that discordant sentiments are already established	219
Plato has strong feelings of right

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

xiii

CHAPTER XXXV.—continued.

	Page		Page
the Republic about Dialectic— and different place assigned to it	236	krates, as a dissenter at Athens, and the Platonic Sokrates, framer and dictator of the Pla- tonic Republic	240
Contradiction with the spirit of other dialogues — Parmenidês, &c.	237	Idea of Good—The Chiefs alone know what it is—If they did not they would be unfit for their functions	ib.
Contradiction with the character and declarations of Sokratês ..	238	What is the Good? Plato does not know; but he requires the Chiefs to know it. Without this the Republic would be a failure ..	241
The remarks here made upon the effect of Dialectic upon youth coincide with the accusation of Melêtus against Sokrates	239
Contrast between the real So-

CHAPTER XXXVI.

TIMÆUS AND KRITIAS.

Persons and scheme of the Timæus and Kritias	243	Primary and Visible Gods— Stars and Heavenly Bodies ..	257
The Timæus is the earliest ancient physical theory, which we pos- sess in the words of its author ..	244	Secondary and generated Gods— Plato's dictum respecting them. His acquiescence in tradition ..	258
Position and character of the Py- thagorean Timæus	ib.	Remarks on Plato's Canon of Be- lief	259
Poetical imagination displayed by Plato. He pretends to nothing more than probability. Con- trast with Sokrates, Isokrates, Xenophon	245	Address and order of the Demi- urgus to the generated Gods ..	261
Fundamental distinction between Ens and Fientia	247	Preparations for the construction of man. Conjunction of three souls and one body	262
Postulates of Plato. The Demiur- gus—The Eternal Ideas—Chao- tic Materia or Fundamentum. The Kosmos is a living being and a God	248	Proceedings of the generated Gods —they fabricate the cranium, as miniature of the Kosmos, with the rational soul rotating within it	263
The Demiurgus not a Creator— The Kosmos arises from his operating upon the random movements of Necessity. He cannot controul necessity—he only persuades	ib.	The cranium is mounted on a tall body—six varieties of motion— organs of sense. Vision—Light	264
Meaning of Necessity in Plato ..	249	Principal advantages of sight and hearing. Observations of the rotation of the Kosmos	266
Process of demiurgic construction —The total Kosmos comes lo- gically first, constructed on the model of the Ἄντροζῶον	251	The Kosmos is product of joint action of Reason and Necessity. The four visible and tangible elements are not primitive ..	ib.
Body of the Kosmos, perfectly spherical—its rotations	253	Forms or Ideas and Materia Prima —Forms of the Elements	267
Soul of the Kosmos—its compo- nent ingredients—stretched from centre to circumference	254	Primordial Chaos—Effect of inter- vention by the Demiurgus ..	268
Regular or measured Time—be- gan with the Kosmos	256	Geometrical theory of the elements —fundamental triangles—regu- lar solids	269
Divine tenants of the Kosmos.		Varieties of each element	271
		Construction of man—imposed by the Demiurgus upon the second-

CHAPTER XXXVI.—continued.

Page	Page
ary Gods. Triple Soul. Distribution thereof in the body ..	272	—subordinate to Plato's views of ethical teleology. Triple soul
Functions of the heart and lungs. Thoracic soul	273	—each soul at once material and mental	285
Abdominal Soul—difficulty of controuling it—functions of the liver	ib.	Triplicity of the soul—espoused afterwards by Galen	287
The liver is made the seat of the prophetic agency. Function of the spleen	274	Admiration of Galen for Plato—his agreement with Plato, and his dissension from Plato—his improved physiology	ib.
Length of the intestinal canal, in order that food might not be frequently needed	275	Physiology and pathology of Plato—compared with that of Aristotle and the Hippocratic treatises	289
Bone—Flesh—Marrow	276	Contrast between the admiration of Plato for the constructors of the Kosmos, and the defective results which he described ..	291
Nails—Mouth—Teeth. Plants produced for nutrition of man ..	ib.	Degeneration of the real tenants of Earth from their primitive type	ib.
General view of Diseases and their Causes	277	Close of the Timæus. Plato turns away from the shameful results, and reverts to the glorification of the primitive types	293
Diseases of mind—wickedness is a disease—no man is voluntarily wicked	278	Kritias: a fragment	294
Badness of mind arises from body	ib.	Prooemium to Timæus. Intended Tetralogy for the Republic. The Kritias was third piece in that Tetralogy	ib.
Preservative and healing agencies against disease—well-regulated exercise, of mind and body proportionally	279	Subject of the Kritias. Solon and the Egyptian priests. Citizens of Platonic Republic are identified with ancient Athenians ..	295
Treatment proper for mind alone, apart from body—supremacy of the rational soul must be cultivated	280	Plato professes that what he is about to recount is matter of history, recorded by Egyptian priests	297
We must study and understand the rotations of the Kosmos—this is the way to amend the rotations of the rational soul	281	Description of the vast island of Atlantis and its powerful kings .	ib.
Construction of women, birds, quadrupeds, fishes, &c., all from the degradation of primitive man	ib.	Corruption and wickedness of the Atlantid people	298
Large range of topics introduced in the Timæus	283	Conjectures as to what the Platonic Kritias would have been—an ethical epic in prose	ib.
The Demiurgus of the Platonic Timæus—how conceived by other philosophers of the same century	ib.	Plato represents the epic Kritias as matter of recorded history ..	299
Adopted and welcomed by the Alexandrine Jews, as a parallel to the Mosaic Genesis	285
Physiology of the Platonic Timæus

CHAPTER XXXVII.

LEGES AND EPINOMIS.

Leges, the longest of Plato's works—Persons of the dialogue ..	301	Untoward circumstances of Plato's later life—His altered tone in regard to philosophy	302
Abandonment of Plato's philosophical projects prior to the Leges	302	General comparison of Leges with Plato's earlier works	304

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

xv

CHAPTER XXXVII.—continued.

Page	Page
Scene of the Leges, not in Athens, but in Krete. Persons Kretan and Spartan, comparatively illiterate	306	the voice and movements of brave and virtuous men. Youth must be taught to take delight in this	320
Gymnastic training, military drill, and public mess, in Krete and Sparta	308	Bad musical exhibitions and poetry forbidden by the lawgiver. Songs and dances must be consecrated by public authority. Prizes at the musical festivals to be awarded by select judges	321
Difference between Leges and Republic, illustrated by reference to the Politikus	309	The Spartan and Kretan agree with the Athenian, that poets must be kept under a strict censorship. But they do not agree as to what the poets are required to conform to	322
Large proportion of preliminary discussions and didactic exhortation in the Leges	311	Ethical creed laid down by the Athenian — Poets required to conform to it	324
Scope of the discussion laid down by the Athenian speaker—The Spartan institutions are framed only for war—This is narrow and erroneous	ib.	The Spartan and Kretan do not agree with him	325
Principles on which the institutions of a state ought to be defended —You must show that its ethical purpose and working is good . .	313	Chorus of Elders are required to set an example in keeping up the purity of the music prescribed	326
Religious and ethical character postulated by Plato for a community	314	The Elders require the stimulus of wine, in order to go through the choric duties with spirit	327
Endurance of pain enforced as a part of the public discipline at Sparta	ib.	Peculiar views of Plato about intoxication	328
Why are not the citizens tested in like manner, in regard to resistance against the seductions of pleasure?	315	General ethical doctrine held by Plato in Leges	329
Drunkenness forbidden at Sparta, and blamed by the Spartan converser. The Athenian proceeds to inquire how far such unqualified prohibition is justifiable . .	ib.	Pleasure — Good — Happiness — What is the relation between them?	ib.
Description of Sokrates in the Symposium — his self-command under abundant potations	316	Comparison of the doctrine laid down in Leges	ib.
Sokrates — an ideal of self-command, both as to pain and as to pleasure	318	Doctrine in Leges about Pleasure and Good—approximates more nearly to the Protagoras than to Gorgias and Philêbus	331
Trials for testing the self-controul of the citizen, under the influence of wine. Dionysiac banquets, under a sober president . .	ib.	Comparison of Leges with Republic and Gorgias	332
The gifts of Dionysus may, by precautions, be rendered useful —Desultory manner of Plato . .	319	Plato here mistrusts the goodness of his own proof. He falls back upon useful fiction	333
Theory of ethical and æsthetical education—Training of the emotions of youth through the influence of the Muses, Apollo, and Dionysus. Choric practice and ceremonies	319	Deliberate ethical fiction employed as means of governing	334
Music and dancing—imitation of		Importance of music and chorus as an engine of teaching for Plato. Views of Xenophon and Aristotle compared	335
		Historical retrospect as to the growth of cities—Frequent destruction of established communities, with only a small remnant left	337
		Historical or legendary retrospect

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

xvi

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

CHAPTER XXXVII.—continued.

	Page		Page
—The Trojan war—The return of the Heracleids	333	poets. No one is allowed to contradict them	352
Difficulties of government—Conflicts about command—Seven distinct titles to command exist among mankind, all equally natural, and liable to conflict	ib.	Contrast of Leges with Gorgias and Phædrus	353
Imprudence of founding government upon any one of these titles separately—Governments of Argos and Messênê ruined by the single principle—Sparta avoided it	339	Regulations for the new colony—About religious worship, the oracles of Delphi and Dodona are to be consulted	355
Plato casts Hellenic legend into accordance with his own political theories	340	Perpetuity of number of citizens, and of lots of land, one to each, inalienable and indivisible	356
Persia and Athens compared—Excess of despotism. Excess of liberty	341	Plato reasserts his adherence to the principle of the Republic, though the repugnance of others hinders him from realising it	357
Cyrus and Darius—Bad training of sons of kings	342	Regulations about land, successions, marriages, &c. The number of citizens must not be allowed to increase	358
Changes for the worse in government of Athens, after the Persian invasion of Greece	343	Position of the city and akropolis—Distribution of the territory and citizens into twelve equal sections or tribes	359
This change began in music, and the poets introduced new modes of composition—they appealed to the sentiment of the people, and corrupted them	ib.	Moveable property—Inequality therein reluctantly allowed, as far as four to one, but no farther	360
Danger of changes in the national music—declared by Damon, the musical teacher	345	Census of the citizens—four classes, with graduated scale of property. No citizen to possess gold or silver. No loans or interest. No debts enforced by law	361
Plato's aversion to the tragic and comic poetry at Athens	346	Board of thirty-seven Nomophylakes—general supervisors of the laws and their execution—how elected	ib.
This aversion peculiar to himself, not shared either by oligarchical politicians, or by other philosophers	347	Military commanders—General council of 360—complicated mode of election	362
Doctrines of Plato in this prefatory matter	348	Character of the electoral scheme—Plato's views about wealth—he caters partly for the oligarchical sentiment, partly for the democratical	363
Compared with those of the Republic and of the Xenophontic Cyropædia	ib.	Meetings of council—other magistrates—Agoranomi—Astynomi, &c.	364
Constructive scheme—Plato's new point of view	350	Defence of the territory—rural police—Agronomi, &c.	365
New Colony to be founded in Krete—its general conditions	ib.	Comparison with the Lacedæmonian Kryptia	366
The Athenian declares that he will not merely promulgate peremptory laws, but will recommend them to the citizens by prologues or hortatory discourses	351	Priests—Exêgêtæ—Property belonging to temples	367
General character of these prologues—didactic or rhetorical homilies	352	Superintendance of Music and Gymnastic. Educational function	ib.
Great value set by Plato himself upon these prologues. They are to serve as type for all		Grave duties of the Minister of Education—precautions in electing him	368

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

xvii

CHAPTER XXXVII.—continued.

	Page		Page
Judicial duties	369	assert libellous falsehoods respecting the heavenly bodies ..	384
Private Causes—how tried	ib.	Hunting—how far permitted or advised	385
Public Causes must be tried directly by the citizens—strong feeling among Greeks about this ..	370	Large general sense which Plato gives to the word hunting ..	386
Plato's way of meeting this feeling—intermediate inquiry and report by a special Commissioner ..	ib.	Number of religious sacrifices to be determined by lawgiver	387
What laws the magistrates are to enforce—Many details must be left to the Nomophylakes	371	Military muster of the whole citizen population once in each month—men, women, and children ..	388
Marriage-Laws—Rich husbands to choose poor wives—No dowries—costly marriage festivals are forbidden	ib.	Gymnastic training must have reference to war, not to athletic prizes	389
Laws about slavery. Slaves to be well fed, and never treated with cruelty or insolence. The master must not converse with them ..	372	Regulation of sexual intercourse. Syssitia or public mess	ib.
Circular form for the city—Temples in the centre—No walls round it	374	Regulations about landed property—Boundaries—Limited power of fining by magistrates	390
Mode of life prescribed to new-married couples—They are to take the best care about good procreation for the city	ib.	Regulations about artisans—Distribution of the annual landed produce	391
Board of superintending matrons ..	375	Admission of resident Metics—conditions attached	392
Age fixed for marriage. During the first ten years the couple are under obligation to procreate for the city—Restrictions during these ten years	ib.	Offences and penal judicature—Procedure of the Dikasts	ib.
How infants are to be brought up—Nurses—Perpetual regulated movements—useful for toning down violent emotions	376	Sacrilege, the gravest of all crimes. High Treason	393
Choric and orchestric movements, their effect in discharging strong emotions	377	Theft punished by pœna dupli. General exhortation founded by Plato upon this enactment ..	394
Training of boys and girls	378	All unjust men are unjust involuntarily.—No such thing as voluntary injustice. Injustice depends upon the temper of the agent—Distinction between damage and injury	395
Musical and literary teaching for youth—Poetry, songs, music, dances, must all be fixed by authority and never changed—Mischief done by poets aiming to please	379	Damage may be voluntary or involuntary—Injustice is shown often by conferring corrupt profit upon another—Purpose of punishment, to heal the distemper of the criminal	396
Boys and girls to learn letters and the lyre, from ten to thirteen years of age. Masters will teach the laws and homilies of the lawgiver, and licensed extracts from the poets	380	Three distinct causes of misguided proceedings. 1. Painful stimulus. 2. Pleasurable stimulus. 3. Ignorance.	ib.
The teaching is to be simple, and common to both sexes	381	The unjust man is under the influence either of the first or second of these causes, without controul of reason. If he acts under controul of Reason, though the Reason be bad, he is not unjust ..	397
Rudiments of arithmetic and geometry to be taught	382	Reasoning of Plato to save his doctrine—That no man commits injustice voluntarily	ib.
Astronomy must be taught, in order that the citizens may not		Peculiar definition of injustice. A man may do great voluntary

CHAPTER XXXVII.—continued.

Page	Page
hurt to others, and yet not be unjust, provided he does it under the influence of Reason, and not of Appetite	398	clared to be the worst — the belief in Gods persuadable by prayer and sacrifice	414
Plato's purpose in the Laws is to prevent or remedy not only injustice but misconduct	399	Heretics censured by Plato—Sokrates censured before the Athenian Dikasts	415
Varieties of homicide—modes of dealing with them penally	400	Kosmological and Kosmogonical theory announced in Leges	416
Homicide involuntary—Homicide under provocation	401	Soul—older, more powerful in the universe than Body. Different souls are at work in the universe —the good soul and the bad soul	ib.
Homicide voluntary	ib.	Plato's argument is unsatisfactory and inconsistent	418
Homicide between kinsmen	402	Reverence of Plato for uniform circular rotation	419
Homicide justifiable — in what cases	403	Argument of Plato to confute the second class of heretics	ib.
Infliction of wounds	ib.	Contrary doctrine of Plato in Republic	420
Infliction of blows	404	Argument of Plato to refute the third class of heretics	421
Plato has borrowed much from Attic procedure, especially in regard to Homicide—Peculiar view of Homicide at Athens, as to procedure	ib.	General belief in Greece about the efficacy of prayer and sacrifice to appease the Gods	422
Impiety or outrage offered to divine things or places	406	Incongruities of Plato's own doctrine	423
All impiety arises from one or other of three heresies. 1. No belief in the Gods. 2. Belief that the Gods interfere very little. 3. Belief that they may be appeased by prayer and sacrifice	ib.	Both Herodotus and Sokrates dissented from Plato's doctrine	424
Punishment for these three heretical beliefs, with or without overt act	ib.	Great opposition which Plato's doctrine would have encountered in Greece	425
Heretic, whose conduct has been virtuous and faultless, to be imprisoned for five years, perhaps more	407	Local infallibility was claimed as a rule in each community, though rarely enforced with severity: Plato both claims it more emphatically, and enforces it more rigorously	426
Heretic with bad conduct—punishment to be inflicted	ib.	Farther civil and political regulations for the Magnetic community. No evidence that Plato had studied the working of different institutions in practice	427
No private worship or religious rites allowed. Every citizen must worship at the public temples	408	Modes of acquiring property—legitimate and illegitimate	ib.
Uncertain and mischievous action of the religious sentiment upon individuals, if not controuled by public authority	ib.	Plato's general regulations leave little room for disputes about ownership	428
Intolerant spirit of Plato's legislation respecting uniformity of belief	409	Plato's principles of legislation, not consistent—comparison of them with the Attic law about Eranoi	429
The persons denounced by Plato as heretics and punished as such, would have included a majority of the Grecian world	412	Regulations about slaves, and about freedmen	430
Proëm or prefatory discourse of Plato, for these severe laws against heretics	413	Provisions in case a slave is sold, having a distemper upon him	431
The third variety of heresy is de-		Retailers. Strict regulations about them. No citizen can be a retailer	ib.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

xix

CHAPTER XXXVII.—continued.

	Page		Page
Frauds committed by sellers — severe punishments on them ..	432	tue of its citizens—that property which is common to the four varieties of Virtue—Reason, Courage, Temperance, Justice	447
Comparison with the lighter punishment inflicted by Attic law ..	433	The Nocturnal Council must comprehend this unity of Virtue, explain it to others, and watch that it be carried out in detail .	448
Regulations about Orphans and Guardians: also about Testamentary Powers	434	They must also adopt, explain, and enforce upon the citizens, an orthodox religious creed. Fundamental dogmas of such creed .	449
Plato's general coincidence with Attic law and its sentiment ..	436	Leges close, without describing the education proper for the Nocturnal Counsellors. Epinomis supplying this defect	450
Tutelage of Orphans — Disagreement of Married Couples—Divorce	ib.	The Athenian declares his plan of education—Arithmetic, Geometry, Astronomy	450
Neglect of parents	437	Theological view of Astronomy—Divine Kosmos—Soul more ancient and more sovereign than Body	451
Poison — Magic — Incantations — Severe punishment	ib.	Improving effects of the study of Astronomy in this spirit	452
Punishment is inflicted with a view to future prevention or amendment	438	Study of arithmetic and geometry: varieties of proportion	453
Penalty for abusive words — for libellous comedy. Mendicity forbidden	439	When the general forms of things have thus been learnt, particular individuals in nature must be brought under them	ib.
Regulations about witnesses on judicial trials	ib.	Question as to education of the Nocturnal Council is answered in the Epinomis	454
Censure of forensic eloquence, and the teachers of it. Penalties against contentious litigation ..	440	Problem which the Nocturnal Council are required to solve, What is the common property of Prudence, Courage, Temperance, Justice, by reason of which each is called Virtue?	455
Many of Plato's laws are discharges of ethical antipathy. The antipathy of Melétus against Sokrates was of the same character	441	The only common property is that all of them are essential to the maintenance of society, and tend to promote human security and happiness	456
Penalty for abuse of public trust —wrongful appropriation of public money—evasion of military service	442	Tendency of the four opposite qualities to lessen human happiness	ib.
Oaths. Dikasts, Judges, Electors, are to be sworn; but no parties to a suit, or interested witnesses, can be sworn	443	A certain measure of all the four virtues is required. In judging of particular acts instigated by each, there is always a tacit reference to the hurt or benefit the special case	457
Regulations about admission of strangers, and foreign travel of citizens	444	Plato places these four virtues in the highest scale of Expetenda or Bona , on the ground that all
Suretyship—Length of prescription for ownership, &c.	445
Judicial trial—three stages. 1. Arbitrators. 2. Tribe - Dikasteries. 3. Select Dikastery ..	ib.
Funerals—proceedings prescribed —expende limited	ib.
Conservative organ to keep up the original scheme of the lawgiver. Nocturnal Council for this purpose—how constituted	446
This Council must keep steadily in view the one great end of the city—Mistakes made by existing cities about the right end ..	447
The one end of the city is the vir-

CHAPTER XXXVII.—continued.

Page	Page
the other Bona are sure to flow from them	458	and happiness of their community as the paramount end	459
In thus directing the attention of the Council to the common property of the four virtues, Plato enforces upon them the necessity of looking to the security		But he enjoins also other objectionable ends	ib.
		Intolerance of Plato—Comparison of the Platonic community with Athens	460

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

OTHER COMPANIONS OF SOKRATES.

Influence exercised by Sokrates over his companions	465	ceive, but to guard against deception	483
Names of those companions	466	If the process of theorising be admissible, it must include negative as well as affirmative	485
Æschines — Oration of Lysias against him	467	Logical position of the Megaric philosophers erroneously described by historians of philosophy. Necessity of a complete collection of difficulties	ib.
Written Sokratic Dialogues—their general character	469	Sophisms propounded by Eubulides. 1. Mentiens. 2. The Veiled Man. 3. Sorites. 4. Cornutus	488
Relations between the companions of Sokrates—Their proceedings after the death of Sokrates	471	Causes of error constant—The Megarics were sentinels against them	490
No Sokratic school—each of the companions took a line of his own	472	Controversy of the Megarics with Aristotle about Power. Arguments of Aristotle	ib.
Eukleides of Megara—he blended Parmenides with Sokrates	473	These arguments not valid against the Megarici	491
Doctrine of Eukleides about Bonum	474	His arguments cited and criticised	492
The doctrine compared to that of Plato—changes in Plato	474	Potential as distinguished from the Actual—What it is	494
Last doctrine of Plato nearly the same as Eukleides	475	Diodōrus Kronus—his doctrine about τὸ δυνάτον	495
Megaric succession of philosophers. Eleian or Eretrian succession	476	Sophism of Diodōrus—'Ο Κυριεῖων Question between Aristotle and Diodōrus, depends upon whether universal regularity of sequence be admitted or denied	ib.
Doctrines of Antisthenes and Aristippus—Ethical, not transcendental	ib.	Conclusion of Diodōrus—defended by Hobbes—Explanation given by Hobbes	498
Preponderance of the negative vein in the Platonic age	477	Reasonings of Diodōrus—respecting Hypothetical Propositions—respecting Motion. His difficulties about the Now of time	500
Harsh manner in which historians of philosophy censure the negative vein	478	Motion is always present, past, and future	501
Negative method in philosophy essential to the controul of the affirmative	ib.	Stilpon of Megara—His great celebrity	502
Sokrates—the most persevering and acute Eristic of his age	479	Menedēmus and the Eretriacs	503
Platonic Parmenides—its extreme negative character	480
The Megarics shared the negative impulse with Sokrates and Plato	481
Eubulides—his logical problems or puzzles—difficulty of solving them—many solutions attempted	482
Real character of the Megaric sophisms, not calculated to de-

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

xxi

CHAPTER XXXVIII.—continued.

Page	Page
Open speech and licence of censure assumed by Menedémus ..	504	to more than one subject	524
Antisthenes took up Ethics principally, but with negative Logic intermingled	ib.	Analogous difficulties in the Platonic Parmenidès	525
He copied the manner of life of Sokrates, in plainness and rigour	505	Menedémus disallowed all negative predications	ib.
Doctrines of Antisthenes exclusively ethical and ascetic. He despised music, literature, and physics	506	Distinction ascribed to Antisthenès between simple and complex objects. Simple objects undefinable	526
Constant friendship of Antisthenes with Sokrates — Xenophontic Symposion	507	Remarks of Plato on this doctrine	527
Diogenes, successor of Antisthenes — His Cynical perfection — striking effect which he produced	ib.	Remarks of Aristotle upon the same	528
Doctrines and smart sayings of Diogenes—Contempt of pleasure —training and labour required —indifference to literature and geometry	510	Later Grecian Cynics—Monimus —Krates—Hipparchia	528
Admiration of Epiktétus for Diogenes, especially for his consistency in acting out his own ethical creed	512	Zeno of Kitium in Cyprus	529
Admiration excited by the asceticism of the Cynics—Asceticism extreme in the East. Comparison of the Indian Gymnosophists with Diogenes	513	Aristippus—life, character, and doctrine	530
The precepts and principles laid down by Sokrates were carried into fullest execution by the Cynics	515	Discourse of Sokrates with Aristippus	ib.
Antithesis between Nature—and Law or Convention—insisted on by the Indian Gymnosophists ..	517	Choice of Héraklès	532
The Greek Cynics—an order of ascetic or mendicant friars ..	518	Illustration afforded of the views of Sokrates respecting Good and Evil	533
Logical views of Antisthenès and Diogenes—they opposed the Platonic Ideas	519	Comparison of the Xenophontic Sokrates with the Platonic Sokrates	534
First protest of Nominalism against Realism	520	Xenophontic Sokrates talking to Aristippus—Kalliklès in Platonic Gorgias	535
Doctrine of Antisthenes about predication—He admits no other predication but identical	521	Language held by Aristippus—his scheme of life	536
The same doctrine asserted by Stilpon, after the time of Aristotle	522	Diversified conversations of Sokrates, according to the character of the hearer	538
Nominalism of Stilpon. His reasons against accidental predication	523	Conversation between Sokrates and Aristippus about the Good and Beautiful	539
Difficulty of understanding how the same predicate could belong		Remarks on the conversation — Theory of Good	540
		Good is relative to human beings and wants, in the view of Sokrates	541
		Aristippus adhered to the doctrine of Sokrates	542
		Life and dicta of Aristippus—His type of character	ib.
		Aristippus acted conformably to the advice of Sokrates	543
		Self-mastery and independence—the great aspiration of Aristippus ..	ib.
		Aristippus compared with Antisthenes and Diogenes—Points of agreement and disagreement between them	546
		Attachment of Aristippus to ethics and philosophy—contempt for other studies	548

VOL. III.

c

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

xxii

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.—continued.

Page	Page
Aristippus taught as a Sophist.	Ethical theory of Aristippus is
His reputation thus acquired	identical with that of the Pla-procured for him the attentions	tonic Sokrates in the Protogo-
of Dionysius and others	ras 555
549	Difference in the manner of stating
Ethical theory of Aristippus and	the theory by the two the Kyrenaic philosophers	ib.
550	Distinction to be made between a
Prudence—good, by reason of the	general theory—and the particu-
pleasure which it ensured, and	lar application of it made by of the pains which it was neces-	the theorist to his own tastes
sary to avoid. Just and honour-	and circumstances able, by law or custom—not by	557
nature	Kyrenaic theorists after Aristippus
552	ib.
Their logical theory—nothing	Theodórus—Annikeris—Hegesias
knowable except the phenom-	558
enal, our own sensations and	Hegesias—Low estimation of life—feelings—no knowledge of the	renunciation of pleasure—coin-
absolute	cidence with the Cynics
553	559
Doctrines of Antisthenes and Aris-	Doctrine of Relativity affirmed by tippus passed to the Stoics and	the Kyrenaics, as well as by
Epikureans	Protagoras
554	ib.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

XENOPHON.

Xenophon—his character—essen-	command over subordinates willtially a man of action and not a	ing and subordinates unwilling .
theorist—the Sokratic element	571
is in him an accessory	Probable circumstances generating
562	these reflections in Xenophon's
Date of Xenophon—probable year	mind of his birth	ib.
563	This text affords subjects for the
His personal history—He consults	Hieron and Cyropædia —Name of Sokrates—takes the opinion of	Sokrates not suitable
the Delphian oracle	572
564	Hieron—Persons of the dialogue
His service and command with the	—Simonides and Hieron
Ten Thousand Greeks, after-	ib.
wards under Agesilaus and the	Questions put to Hieron, view
Spartans.—He is banished from	taken by Simonides, Answer
Athens	of Hieron
565	573
His residence at Skillus near Olym-	Misery of governing unwilling pia	subjects declared by Hieron . . .
566	574
Family of Xenophon—his son	Advice to Hieron by Simonides—
Gryllus killed at Mantinea . .	that he should govern well, and 567	thus make himself beloved by
Death of Xenophon at Corinth—	his subjects
—Story of the Eleian Exegetæ .	576
ib.	Probable experience had by Xeno-
Xenophon different from Plato and	phon of the feelings at Olympia
the other Sokratic brethren . .	against Dionysius
568	577
His various works— Memorabilia ,	Xenophon could not have chosen
Œkonomikus , &c.	a Grecian despot to illustrate
569	his theory of the happiness of
Ischomachus, hero of the Œkono-	governing willing subjects . .
nikus —ideal of an active citi-	578
zen, cultivator, husband, house-	Cyropædia —blending of Spartan master, &c.	and Persian customs—Xeno-
570	phon's experience of Cyrus the Text upon which Xenophon in-	Younger
sists—capital difference between	ib.

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-01498-4 - Plato and the Other Companions of Sokrates, Volume 3

George Grote

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

xxiii

CHAPTER XXXIX.—continued.

Page	Page
Portrait of Cyrus the Great—his education—Preface to the Cyropædia	579	Cyrus when his conquests are completed—Oriental despotism, wisely arranged	591
Xenophon does not solve his own problem—The governing aptitude and popularity of Cyrus come from nature, not from education	581	Persian present reality—is described by Xenophon as thoroughly depraved, in striking contrast to the establishment of Cyrus	592
Views of Xenophon about public and official training of all citizens	582	Xenophon has good experience of military and equestrian proceedings—No experience of finance and commerce	ib.
Details of (so called) Persian education—Severe discipline—Distribution of four ages	583	Discourse of Xenophon on Athenian finance and the condition of Athens. His admiration of active commerce and variety of pursuits	593
Evidence of the good effect of this discipline—Hard and dry condition of the body	584	Recognised poverty among the citizens. Plan for improvement	594
Exemplary obedience of Cyrus to the public discipline—He had learnt justice well—His award about the two coats—Lesson inculcated upon him by the Justice-Master	585	Advantage of a large number of Metics. How these may be encouraged	595
Xenophon's conception of the Sokratic problems—He does not recognise the Sokratic order of solution of those problems	586	Proposal to raise by voluntary contributions a large sum to be employed as capital by the city. Distribution of three oboli per head per day to all the citizens	ib.
Definition given by Sokrates of Justice—Insufficient to satisfy the exigencies of the Sokratic Elenchus	588	Purpose and principle of this distribution	597
Biography of Cyrus — constant military success earned by suitable qualities—Variety of characters and situations	589	Visionary anticipations of Xenophon, financial and commercial .	598
Generous and amiable qualities of Cyrus. Abradates and Pantheia	590	Xenophon exhorts his countrymen to maintain peace	600
Scheme of government devised by		Difference of the latest compositions of Xenophon and Plato, from their point of view in the earlier	601