

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I.

TRANSACTIONS WHICH BROUGHT ON THE WAR.

CHAPTER I.

	PAGE
The Crimea,	1
Ground for tracing the causes of the war,	5
Europe in 1850,	5
Standing armies,	5
Personal government,	5
Comparison between this system and that of governing through a council,	5
Personal government in Russia,	9
In Austria,	9
In Prussia,	9
Administration of foreign affairs under the Sultan,	9
Constitutional system of England in its bearing upon the conduct of foreign affairs,	9
And of France down to the 2d of December 1851,	11
Power of Russia,	12
Turkey,	13

CHAPTER II.

The Usage which tends to protect the weak against the strong,	20
Instance of a wrong to which the Usage did not apply,	22
Instance in which the Usage was applicable and was disobeyed,	22
Instances in which the Usage was faithfully obeyed,	23
By Austria,	23
By Russia,	24
By England,	25
The practical working of the Usage,	27
Aspect of Europe in reference to the Turkish Empire,	30
Policy of Austria,	30
Of Prussia,	31
Of France,	32
Of England,	34
Of the lesser states of Europe,	36

xiv CONTENTS OF VOLUME I.

CHAPTER III.

	PAGE
Holy shrines	38
Contest for the possession of the shrines,	41
Patronage of foreign Powers,	41
Comparison between the claims of Russia and of France,	42
Measures taken by the French President,	44
By the Russian Envoy,	46
Embarrassment of the Porte,	46
Mutual concessions,	46
The actual subject of dispute,	46
Increased violence of the French Government,	47
Afif Bey's mission,	48
Delivery of the key and the star,	51
Indignation of Russia,	51
Advance of Russian forces,	53

CHAPTER IV.

Natural ambition of Russia,	54
Its irresolute nature,	59
The Emperor Nicholas,	61
His policy from 1829 to 1853,	69

CHAPTER V.

Troubles in Montenegro,	71
Count Leiningen's mission,	72
The Czar's plan of sending another mission to the Porte at the same time,	72
Plans of the Emperor Nicholas,	73

CHAPTER VI.

Position of Austria in regard to Turkey at the beginning of 1853,	74
Of Prussia,	75
Of France,	75
Of England,	78
Seeming state of opinion there,	78
Sir Hamilton Seymour,	83
His conversation with the Emperor,	84
Reception of the Czar's overtures by the English Government,	90
Result of Count Leiningen's mission,	91
Its effect upon the plans of the Czar,	92
He abandons the idea of going to war,	92

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I. XV

CHAPTER VII.

	PAGE
The pain of inaction,	93
The Czar's new scheme of action,	95
His choice of an ambassador,	96
Prince Mentschikoff,	96
Mentschikoff at Constantinople,	98
Panic in the Divan,	99
Colonel Rose,	100
The Czar seemingly tranquillised,	101
The French fleet suddenly ordered to Salamis,	101
The Emperor Nicholas, his concealments,	102
Mentschikoff's demands,	103

CHAPTER VIII.

Foreign 'influence,'	107
Grounds for foreign interference in Turkey,	107
Rivalry between Nicholas and Sir Stratford Canning,	111
Sir Stratford Canning,	111
Instructed to return to Constantinople,	116
His instructions,	116

CHAPTER IX.

Lord Stratford's return,	121
His plan of resistance to Mentschikoff's demands,	123
Commencement of the struggle between Prince Mentschikoff and Lord Stratford,	125

CHAPTER X.

State of the dispute respecting the Holy Places,	132
Lord Stratford's measures for settling it,	135
He settles it,	138
Terms on which it was settled,	138

CHAPTER XI.

Peaceful aspect of the negotiation,	141
Angry despatches from St Petersburg,	141
Cause of the change,	142
Inferred tenor of the fresh despatches,	142
Mentschikoff's demand for a protectorate of the Greek Church in Turkey,	144
Effect of conceding it,	145
The negotiations which followed the demand,	145
Rage of the Czar on finding himself encountered by Lord Stratford,	149

xvi CONTENTS OF VOLUME I.

CHAPTER XI.—continued.

	PAGE
Its effect upon the negotiation,	151
Mentschikoff's difficulty,	151
He is baffled by Lord Stratford,	152
He presses his demand in a new form,	153
Counsels of Lord Stratford,	154
His communications with Prince Mentschikoff,	154
His advice to the Turkish Ministers,	156
His audience of the Sultan,	159
The disclosure which he had reserved for the Sultan's ear,	161
Turkish answer to Mentschikoff's demand,	161
Mentschikoff's angry reply,	162
His private audience of the Sultan,	162
This causes a change of ministry at Constantinople,	163
But fails to shake the Sultan,	163
Mentschikoff violently presses his demands,	164
The Great Council determine to resist,	165
Offers made by the Porte under the advice of Lord Stratford,	165
Mentschikoff replies by declaring his mission at an end,	166
The representatives of the four Powers assembled by Lord Stratford,	166
Policy involved in this step,	167
Unanimity of the four representatives,	167
Their measures,	167
Russia's ultimatum,	168
Its rejection, and final threats of Prince Mentschikoff,	170
His departure,	170
Effect of the mission upon the credit of Nicholas,	171
Position in which Lord Stratford's skill had placed the Porte,	174
Engagements contracted by England,	176
Obligations contracted by the act of giving advice,	177
England in concert with France becomes engaged to defend the Sultan's dominions,	178
The process by which England became bound,	179
Slowness of the English Parliament,	179
Powers intrusted to Lord Stratford,	180

CHAPTER XII.

Rage of the Czar,	182
The Danubian Principalities,	184
The Czar's scheme for occupying them,	185
Efforts to effect an accommodation,	186
Defective representation of France, Austria, and Prussia, at the Court of St Petersburg,	187
The Czar's reliance upon the acquiescence of England,	189
Orders for the occupation of the Principalities,	194

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I. xvii

CHAPTER XII.—continued.

	PAGE
The Pruth passed,	195
Russian manifesto,	195
Course taken by the Sultan,	196
Religious character of the threatened war,	197

CHAPTER XIII.

Effect of the Czar's threat upon European Powers,	198
Upon Austria,	198
Upon Prussia,	199
Effect produced by the actual invasion of the Principalities,	200
In Austria,	200
In France and England,	201
In Prussia,	201
Attitude of Europe generally,	201
Concord of the four Powers,	201
Their means of repression,	202
Their joint measures,	202
Importance of maintaining close concert between the four Powers,	202

CHAPTER XIV.

State of the French Republic in November 1851,	205
Prince Louis Bonaparte,	207
His overtures to the gentlemen of France at the time when he was President,	223
He is rebuffed and falls into other hands,	224
Motives which pressed him forward,	224
He declares for universal suffrage,	225
His solemn declarations of loyalty to the Republic,	226
Morny,	227
Fleury,	228
Fleury searches in Algeria and finds St Arnaud,	230
St Arnaud is suborned and made Minister of War,	230
Maupas,	231
He is suborned and made Prefect of Police,	232
Persigny,	232
Contrivance for paralysing the National Guard,	233
The army, and its indignation at M. Baze's proposal,	234
Selection of regiments and of officers for the army of Paris,	235
Magnan,	235
Meeting of twenty generals at Magnan's house,	236
The army encouraged in its hatred of the people,	237
Assembly at the Elysée on Monday night,	237
Vieyra's errand,	237

xviii CONTENTS OF VOLUME I.

	PAGE
Before midnight several of the confederates assemble in an inner room,	237
The President intrusts a packet to Colonel Beville,	238
Transaction at the State Printing-Office,	239
Tenor of the Proclamations,	239
Letters dismissing ministers not in the plot,	239
Hesitation of the plotters at the Elysée,	240
Fleury drags them on,	240
The order from the Minister of War is in the hands of Magnan,	240
Maupas's arrangements for the intended arrests,	241
Disposition of the troops,	241
The arrests of the principal generals and prominent statesmen,	242
Morny takes possession of the Home Office,	243
Newspapers seized and stopped,	243
Meeting of the Assembly,	243
It is dispersed by troops,	243
The President's ride,	243
Seclusion and gloom of Prince Louis,	244
Measures for sheltering him from alarming messengers,	245
Meeting of the Assembly in another building,	246
Its decrees,	246
Troops ascend the stairs, but hesitate to use force,	246
Written orders from Magnan to clear the hall,	247
The Assembly refuses to yield except to force,	247
The whole Assembly taken prisoners by the troops, and marched to the Quai d'Orsay,	247
The Assembly imprisoned in D'Orsay barrack,	248
The Members of the Assembly carried off to different prisons in felons' vans,	249
The quality of the men imprisoned,	249
The quality of the men who imprisoned them,	250
Sitting of the Supreme Court,	250
The Judges driven from the bench,	251
Circumstances which rendered it imprudent to resort to insurrection for the defence of the laws,	251
The Committee of Resistance,	253
Attempted rising in the Faubourg St Antoine,	254
The barricade of the Rue St Marguerite,	254
Barricades in Central Paris,	255
State of Paris at two o'clock on Dec. 4,	256
Attitude of the troops,	256
Hesitation of Magnan,	257
Its probable grounds,	258
Apparent terror of the plotters,	258
Stratagem of forming the 'Consultative Commission,	258

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I. xix

CHAPTER XIV.—continued.

	PAGE
Magnan at length resolves to act,	260
Point of contact between the ground occupied by the troops and that occupied by the insurgents,	260
State of the Boulevard at three o'clock,	261
The massacre of the Boulevard,	263
Slaughter in Central Paris,	271
Slaughter of prisoners,	273
Mode of dealing with some of the prisoners at the Prefecture, . .	274
Gradations by which slayers of vanquished men may be distinguished,	274
Slaughter ranging under all those categories caused by the con- federates,	277
Inquiry as to the alleged shooting of prisoners who were in the hands of the civil power,	277
Uncertainty as to the number of people killed,	281
Total loss of the army in killed,	282
Effect of the massacre upon the people of Paris,	282
Effect of the massacre in removing one of Louis Bonaparte's personal disqualifications,	284
The fate of the provinces,	285
Motives for the ferocity of the measures taken,	287
Terror, and afterwards a hope of gaining support from men afraid of anarchy,	287
General dread of the Socialists,	287
The brethren of the Elysée take advantage of this,	288
They pretend to be engaged in a war against Socialism,	288
Support thus obtained,	289
Commissaries sent into the provinces,	289
The Church,	290
France dismanned,	292
Twenty-six thousand five hundred men transported,	293
The Plebiscite,	295
Causes rendering free election impossible,	295
The election under martial law,	296
Violent measures taken for coercing the election,	296
Contrivance for coercing the election by the vote of the army, . .	298
France succumbs,	298
Prince Louis sole lawgiver of France,	299
The laws he gave her,	299
Importance of the massacre on the Boulevard,	299
Inquiry into its cause,	299
The passion of terror,	301
State of Prince Louis Bonaparte during the period of danger, . .	302
He gives all he has to the soldiers,	303
He even signed the decree of the 5th of December,	305
State of Jerome Bonaparte,	305

XX CONTENTS OF VOLUME I.

CHAPTER XIV.—continued.

	PAGE
Natural anxiety of Napoleon, son of Jerome,	306
Bodily state of Maupas,	306
Grounds for the anxiety of the plotters and of Magnan, &c., .	307
Effect of anxious suspense upon French troops,	307
Surmised cause of the massacre,	309
Gratitude due to Fleury,	311
The use the Elysée made of France,	311
The oath which the President had taken,	312
His added promise as ‘a man of honour,’	312
The Te Deum,	312
The President becomes Emperor of the French,	314
The inaction of great numbers of Frenchmen,	314
Its cause,	315
The gentlemen of France resolve to stand aloof from the Government,	316
The constant peril in which the confederates were kept, . .	316
The foreign policy of France used to prop the new throne, . .	316

CHAPTER XV.

Immediate effect of the Coup d’Etat upon the tranquillity of Europe,	318
The policy which it necessitated,	318
The French Government coerces the Sultan into measures offensive to Russia,	319
And then seeks an alliance with England,	319
Personal feelings of the new Emperor,	320
The French Emperor’s scheme for superseding the concord of the four Powers,	321
The nature of the understanding of Midsummer 1853 between France and England,	326
Announcement of it to Parliament,	331
Failure of Parliament to understand the real import of the disclosure,	331
The Queen’s Speech, August 1853,	332
This marks where the roads to peace and war branch off, . .	333

CHAPTER XVI.

Count Nesselrode,	334
State of the Czar after learning that the fleets of France and Eng- land were ordered to the mouth of the Dardanelles,	335
His complaints to Europe,	336
Their refutation,	336
The Vienna Conference,	337
The effect upon England of becoming entangled in a separate under- standing with France,	338
The French Emperor’s ambiguous scheme of action,	338

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I. xxi

CHAPTER XVI.—continued.

	PAGE
His diplomacy seems pacific,	339
He engages England in naval movements tending to provoke war, .	339
The Bosphorus and the Dardanelles,	340
The Sultan's ancient right to control them,	341
Policy of Russia in regard to the Straits,	341
The rights of the Sultan and the five Powers under the Treaty of 1841,	342
How these rights were affected by the Czar's seizure of the Principalities,	342
Powerful means of coercing the Czar,	343
Importance of refraining from a premature use of the power, .	343
Naval movements in which the French Emperor engages England, .	343
Proofs of this,	344
Means well fitted for enforcing a just peace so used to provoke
war,	345

CHAPTER XVII.

Lord Stratford's scheme of pacification,	346
The 'Vienna Note,'	347
Agreed to by the four Powers and accepted by Russia,	348
The French Emperor does nothing to thwart the success of the Note,	348
Lord Stratford had not been consulted,	349
The 'Vienna Note' in the hands of Lord Stratford,	351
The Turkish Government determines to reject it unless altered, .	352
Lord Stratford and the Turks stand alone in Europe,	353
They are firm,	353
Language used by Nesselrode,	354
The Protectorate of the Greek Church in Turkey still the thing in question,	354
The Porte declares war,	354
Warlike spirit of the belligerents,	354
Warlike ardour of the people in the Ottoman Empire,	355
Moderation of the Turkish Government,	356
Its effect on the mind of the Czar,	356
The Czar's proclamation,	356

CHAPTER XVIII.

Announcement by the Czar,	358
The negotiations are continued,	358
Movement at Constantinople,	359
The use made of this by the Turkish Minister,	359
They succeed in alarming the French Ambassador,	360
Composure of Lord Stratford,	361
His wise and guarded measures,	361

xxii CONTENTS OF VOLUME I.

	PAGE
The French Emperor. His means of putting a pressure upon the English Cabinet,	362
Violent urgency of the French Emperor for an advance of the fleets to Constantinople,	364
Needlessness of the measure,	364
Its tendency to bring on war,	365
The English Government yields to the French Emperor,	366
Fleet ordered up to Constantinople,	366
Want of firmness and discretion evinced in the adoption of the measure,	366
Baron Brunnow's remonstrance,	367
Effect of the measure at St Petersburg,	368
Count Nesselrode's sorrow,	368
The Czar's determination to retaliate,	368
Error of the notions regarding the disaster of Sinope,	369
Ostentatious publicity of the Russian operations in the Black Sea,	369
Tidings of an impending attack by the Russian fleet,	370
Inaction of the Ambassadors and the Admirals,	371
The disaster of Sinope,	373

CHAPTER XIX.

Chasm in the instructions to the Admirals of the Western Powers,	375
Tends to bring blame upon the Home Government,	376
Reception of the tidings of Sinope in France and England,	376
The anger of the English people diverted towards the Czar,	377
An unjust charge against him gains belief in England,	377
First decision of the English Cabinet in regard to Sinope,	378
Lord Palmerston resigns office,	378
Proposal of the French Emperor,	379
Danger of breaking down the old barriers between peace and war,	379
Ambiguous character of the proposal,	379
The French Emperor presses upon the English Cabinet,	380
Lord Aberdeen's Cabinet yields,	381
Lord Palmerston withdraws his resignation,	382
Orders to execute the scheme and to announce it at St Petersburg,	383

CHAPTER XX.

Terms of settlement agreed to by the four Powers and forced upon the Turks,	384
Grounds for expecting an amicable solution,	384
Friendly reception by the Russian Government of the news of the first decision of the English Cabinet,	385

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I. xxiii

CHAPTER XX.—continued.

	PAGE
Announcement at St Petersburg of the scheme finally adopted by the Western Powers,	386
The negotiations are ruined,	387
Rupture of the diplomatic relations,	387
The Czar prepares to invade Turkey, and fleets enter the Euxine, .	387

CHAPTER XXI.

Military error of the Czar in occupying Wallachia,	388
Of this Omar Pasha takes skilful advantage,	388
His autumn and winter campaigns,	389
Embarrassment and distress of the Czar,	390
He resorts for aid to Paskievitch,	391
Paskievitch's counsels,	392
Movement of troops in the Russian Empire,	394

CHAPTER XXII.

Sir John Burgoyne and Colonel Ardent despatched to the Levant, .	395
Troops sent to Malta,	396
Tendency of this measure,	396
Ministers determine to propose but a small increase of the army, .	396
Continuance of Lord Aberdeen's imprudent language,	397

CHAPTER XXIII.

The French Emperor's letter to the Czar,	399
Mission to St Petersburg from the English Peace Party,	402

CHAPTER XXIV.

Temper of the English an obstacle to the maintenance of peace, .	404
Their desire for war,	404
Causes of the apparent change in their feeling,	404
State of feeling in the spring of 1853,	408
Effect of the Czar's aggression upon the public mind,	409
Still in foreign affairs the nation looks for guidance to public men, .	409
Lord Aberdeen,	410
Mr Gladstone,	412
Lord Aberdeen and Mr Gladstone remain in office,	413
Effect of this on the efforts of those who wished to prevent war, .	413
The ruin of their cause not for want of grounds to stand upon, .	415
Nor of oratorical power,	416
Mr Cobden and Mr Bright,	416
Reasons why they were able to make no stand,	417

xxiv CONTENTS OF VOLUME I.

CHAPTER XXV.
	PAGE
Meeting of Parliament,	422
The Queen's Speech,	422
The policy which it indicated,	423
The separate understanding with France,	423
Unswerving resolve of Austria and Prussia to rid the Principalities of Russian troops,	423
Proofs of this from transactions anterior to the Queen's Speech,	424
From transactions subsequent thereto,	428
The interests of Austria and Prussia begin to divide them from the Western Powers,	434
Austria and Prussia never swerve from their resolve,	435

CHAPTER XXVI.
Spirit of warlike adventure in England,	437
Its bearing upon the policy of the Government,	438
England's engagements with the French Emperor,	439
Into this policy the bulk of the Cabinet drift,	440
The Minister who went his own way,	440
Lord Palmerston's way of masking the tendency of the Government,	450
Debates upon the Address,	451
Parliament in the dark as to the real tendency of the Government,	451
Production of the papers,	453
Their effect,	453
Question on which the judgment of Parliament should have been rested,	454

CHAPTER XXVII.
Last step, which brought on the final rupture,	456
Austria's proposition,	457
Importance of avoiding haste,	458
Pressure of the French Emperor,	458
Eagerness of the people in England,	458
The Government loses its composure,	459
The summons despatched by England,	459
Instructions to the messenger,	460
And to Lord Westmoreland,	460
Austria not required to take part in the summons,	460
The counter-proposals of Russia reach Vienna,	461
They are rejected by the Conference of the four Powers,	461
Austria and Prussia support the summons without taking part in the step,	461
The French summons,	462
France and England brought into a state of war with Russia,	462

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I. XXV

CHAPTER XXVII.—continued.

	PAGE
Message from the French Emperor to the Chambers,	462
Message from the Queen to Parliament,	463
Declaration of war,	463
Difficulty of framing it,	464
The Czar's Declaration and War Manifesto,	465
His invasion of Turkey is commenced,	466
Treaty between the Sultan and the Western Powers,	466
Treaty between France and England,	466

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Recapitulation,	468
Standing causes of the disturbance,	468
Effect of personal government by the Czar,	468
By the Emperor of Austria,	469
By the King of Prussia,	470
By the French Emperor,	470
Share of Russia in bringing about the war,	471
Share of Turkey in causing it,	475
Share which Austria had,	477
In other respects Austria discharged her duty,	479
Share which Prussia had,	479
In other respects Prussia discharged her duty,	481
As did also the German Confederation,	482
Share which the French Government had in causing the war,	482
Share which England had,	485
The volitions which governed events,	493

APPENDIX.

Part I.—Papers showing the difference which led to the rupture of Prince Mentschikoff's negotiation,	497
Part II.—The 'Vienna Note,' with the proposed Turkish modifications,	501
Part III.—Papers showing the concord existing between the four Powers at the time when France and England were engaging in a separate course of action,	503
Part IV.—Note to page 302,	518
Part V.—Note respecting the 'Te Deum' for Sinope,	519