

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-06019-6 - Thoughts and Sentiments on the Evil and Wicked Traffic of the
Slavery and Commerce of the Human Species

Ottobah Cugoano

Table of Contents

More information

GENERAL CONTENTS.

Page 1. THANKFUL acknowledgment of those that have written and testified against slavery—
3. Some reflexions and apology for advancing these Thoughts and Sentiments—5. Some account of the Author's captivity—11. Reflexions on his deliverance from Grenada—13. Thanks to God and his good Providence for the great advantages of the Bible.

Page 14. General observations on the Curfory Remarker, an advocate for slavery—21. Sundry pretences for enslaving the Africans answered—23. False consequences as some good arising from slavery exploded—24. Almost nothing to be seen abroad among christians but ruffians and barbarians—25. Some account of the slave-procurers—27. That the Africans sell their wives and children, nothing can be more contrary to their natural feelings, and absurd.

Page 29. Observations on other grand pretences made use of by the favourers of slavery refuted—31. Different complexions and features among men as being natural to different climates and situations—32. Concerning Cain, and the notion of some mark set upon him—33. Concerning the prediction and curse which took place in the lineage of Canaan—36. Of Africa chiefly peopled by the descendants of Ham—38. That slavery was an ancient custom, but never lawful.

Page 40. Another part of the grand pretence for enslaving men considered as admitted into the law by Moses, and the case of the Canaanites, who were reduced to a poor and menial employment, equal to the state of labourers

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-06019-6 - Thoughts and Sentiments on the Evil and Wicked Traffic of the
Slavery and Commerce of the Human Species

Ottobah Cugoano

Table of Contents

More information

ii

CONTENTS.

bourers in any free country—43. State of bond servants admitted for great and wise purposes, but not contrary to the natural rights and liberties of men—45. Allegorical use of different complexions and other things, as mentioned in sacred writ, intended for something else than only being eligible in the variety of the scale of nature—47. Another form of instruction for men considered by the state of bondage mentioned in the law—50. Allegorical use of the wars of the Israelites, &c.—53. Conclusion, that no slavery can be lawful.

Page 54. Observations on various perversions of sacred writ made use of by the favourers of slavery, to embolden themselves in wickedness; and other historical precedents made use of to encourage slavery and extirpation, shewn to be unwarrantable and highly absurd.

Page 59. Observation on the brutish stupidity of men in general—60. Laws of God considered against slavery, and that the enslavers of men are the servants of the devil—62. Unlawfulness of slavery, and the European traffic in it only piracy—63. Contrary to the law of our Lord Christ—64. All the dealers of slaves guilty of death according to the righteous law of God; and if they do not repent, they must lie under their crimes for ever.

Page 66. All the criminal laws of civilization ought to be founded upon the law of God; and the breakers of that law, in many cases, ought to be enslaved, and those that break the laws of civilization, are the only men that others have any right to enslave, because they sell themselves to work iniquity.

Page 73. Every slaveholder is a robber, if he buys a man without his own consent, or by any fraudulent method to obtain his consent unawares; and it is the duty of every man to deliver himself from rogues and villains if he can.

Page 74. Historical observations, and the case of the Africans considered.

Page 77. Observations on the cruel invaders and desolators of the Americans, and the unchristian barbarities of the Europeans against the heathen nations—85. False religion a general cause of it—The symbolical image of evil and wickedness described.

Page

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-06019-6 - Thoughts and Sentiments on the Evil and Wicked Traffic of the Slavery and Commerce of the Human Species

Ottobah Cugoano

Table of Contents

More information

C O N T E N T S.

iii

Page 86. The great wickedness carried on by the British nation, the cause of leading them into a world of debt—That debt a cause of oppression and slavery—The various instigators of it profligate and wicked men.

Page 92. The Spanish barbarities imitated by other nations, and the infernal invention of slavery followed after—94. The sufferings of the Africans described.

Page 97. An estimate of one hundred thousand of the Africans annually murdered by the British instigators and carriers on of slavery, and the dreadful consequences of it declared.

Page 103. Every man in Great-Britain responsible, in some degree, for the shocking and inhuman murders and oppressions of the Africans—105. Kings and great men considered as more particularly guilty; dead or alive every man must answer before God for all that they do at last.

Page 110. Great-Britain considered as more particularly guilty; many instances of their barbarity might be added, I have only recited one—112. What the Africans think and declare of the West-India slavery—114. That the several nations of Europe, who carry on slavery, are become barbarous, and the British nation has joined as the head of that wicked combination.

Page 118. Address to the British inhabitants, why slavery should not be abolished, and, 122, why it has not been abolished and prohibited—let the wickedness of the wicked declare their iniquity, because they have not done otherwise. And add to that enquiry, page 123, after the interrogation, line 6, And why then might not the grand monster and image of iniquity have thundered forth his bulls to prevent all superstition and idolatry, and to prohibit all cruelty, slavery and persecution whatever, and to have caused the genuine word of truth to be read and made known in all languages throughout the world?

Page 123. Address to the saints of God—to the devout among men—to the inhabitants of the land, to plead that slavery ought to be abolished.

Page 126. Supplication of the enslaved Africans—127. Our case considered before God—129. Consideration what ought to be done, three things proposed—135. Some observations on the three preceding considerations,

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-06019-6 - Thoughts and Sentiments on the Evil and Wicked Traffic of the
Slavery and Commerce of the Human Species

Ottobah Cugoano

Table of Contents

More information

iv CONTENTS.

tions, as only proposed that some wise and righteous plan might be adopted.

Page 138 Particular thanks to the promoters of that laudable and charitable undertaking of sending a company of the black poor to Sierra Leona; but some contrary effects to be feared from the bad conducting of it.

Page 142. Observations for instructing the heathen nations in the knowledge of christianity, &c.

N.B. Since these Thoughts and Sentiments have been read by some, I find a general Approbation has been given, and that the things pointed out thereby might be more effectually taken into consideration, I was requested by some friends to add this information concerning myself:—When I was kidnapped and brought away from Africa, I was then about 13 years of age, in the year of the Christian era 1770; and after being about nine or ten months in the slave gang at Grenada, and about one year at different places in the West Indies, with Alexander Campbell, Esq; who brought me to England in the end of the year 1772, I was advised by some good people to get myself baptized, that I might not be carried away and sold again.—I was called Stewart by my master, but in order that I might embrace this ordinance, I was called John Stewart, and I went several times to Dr. Skinner, who instructed me, and I was baptized by him, and registered at St. James's Church in the year 1773. Some of my fellow-servants, who assisted me in this, got themselves turned away for it; I have only put my African name to the title of the book.—When I was brought away from Africa, my father and relations were then chief men in the kingdom of Agimaque and Affinee; but what they may be now, or whether dead or alive, I know not. I wish to go back as soon as I can hear any proper security and safe conveyance can be found; and I wait to hear how it fares with the Black People sent to Sierra Leona. But it is my highest wish and earnest prayer to God, that some encouragement could be given to send able school masters, and intelligent ministers, who would be faithful and able to teach the Christian religion. This would be doing great good to the Africans, and be a kind restitution for the great injuries that they have suffered. But still I fear no good can be done near any of the European settlements, while such a horrible and infernal traffic of slavery is carried on by them. Wherever the foot of man can go, at the forts and garrisons it would seem to be wrote with these words—

O earth! O sea! cover not thou the blood of the poor negro slaves.