

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-06157-5 - The Spirit of the Modern System of War

Dietrich Heinrich von Bülow Edited and Translated by C. Malorti de Martemont

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS.

The Commentator's Preface - - - - - i

PART THE FIRST.

A View of the Principle on which the Modern System of War is founded; of the Alterations it has produced in the Military System; and of the Rules resulting from it for the different Circumstances and Operations of War.

	PAGE
CHAPTER I. General Notions. Examination of offensive Lines of Operation; and first, of a single Line of Operation, which, proceeding from a single Point constituting its Base, advances into an Enemy's Country - - - - -	1
II. Of Lines of Operation, which, proceeding from the Extremities of a right-lined Base, form, in meeting at the Object, an Angle less than ninety Degrees; and of those whose Base is a Segment of a Circle likewise less than ninety Degrees -	36
III. Of diverging Lines of Operation - -	42
IV. Of parallel Lines of Operation - - -	51
V. Of Lines of Operation, which, proceeding from the Extremities of a Base in a

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-06157-5 - The Spirit of the Modern System of War

Dietrich Heinrich von Bülow Edited and Translated by C. Malorti de Martemont

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
right Line, form, in meeting at the Object, a right Angle, or an obtuse one; and of those whose Base is the Segment of a Circle of ninety Degrees and more	58
CHAPTER VI. Of the most advantageous Form and Direction of a Base - - - - -	69
VII. Of Retreats within the Base; of Retreats on a single Line; and of those which are concentrated in the Form of an acute or of an obtuse Angle - - - -	76
VIII. Of parallel and eccentric Retreats - -	78
IX. Of the Result of all the foregoing Inquiries, relative to the Spirit of the Modern System of War - - - - -	81
X. The Difference between Strategics and Tactics - - - - -	86
XI. Of the Order of Battle, considered as the Base of the Lines of March, and of the Lines of Fire; and of the latter, considered as Lines of Operation in Tactics - - - - . - - - -	94
XII. Of the Chevalier Folard's Column - -	168
XIII. Difference between the Tactics of the Ancients, and those of the Moderns -	177
XIV. Result of the foregoing Chapters - -	183

PART THE SECOND.

Consequence of the Principle which requires a Military Base previous to any Operation.

CHAPTER I. Masses, that is to say, the greatest Number of fighting Men, and the greatest Quantity of the Materials requisite in

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-06157-5 - The Spirit of the Modern System of War

Dietrich Heinrich von Bülow Edited and Translated by C. Malorti de Martemont

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
War, must, sooner or later, among the Moderns give Success; and not, as among the Ancients, the Superiority of Discipline and of Courage - - - -	187
CHAPTER II. One Consequence of the foregoing Ex- position is, that small States, in future, will no more vanquish great ones; but, on the contrary, will finally become a Prey to them - - - - -	193
III. Europe will one Day be divided into several great States - - - - -	196
IV. The Military Energies of States not being unlimited, it follows, from the Principle of the Base, that they must diminish proportionally the further they remove from their Source. They can- not act vigorously beyond certain nat- ural Limits. Reflections on Limits of this Kind - - - - -	198
V. The Superiority given by the Modern System of War to Number over Valour and intrinsic Merit, is favourable to De- fensive War, and to the Insurrection of a People, though opposed by a regular disciplined Army - - - - -	213
VI. As, sooner or later, the various States of Europe will extend themselves to their natural Limits; and as it is both fruit- less and dangerous for a Government to carry its Operations beyond the Frontiers prescribed to it by Nature, the necessary Consequence of this Order of Things will be perpetual Peace - - - - -	222
VII. The Conclusion - - - . - - - -	230

Cambridge University Press

978-1-108-06157-5 - The Spirit of the Modern System of War

Dietrich Heinrich von Bülow Edited and Translated by C. Malorti de Martemont

Table of Contents

More information

CONTENTS!

PART THE THIRD.

*Application of the Principle of the Base to past
Military Events, and to those that may take Place in future.*

	PAGE
CHAPTER I. Of the Period at which the first Development of the Principle of the Base was made - - - - -	233
II. Examination of some Campaigns of the seven Years War; and Remarks on that War, in general - - - - -	245
III. Observations on the Wars which have occurred since the seven Years War, and on the first Events of the French Revolution - - - - -	261
IV. What are the natural Bounds of the great European States? What Inference, in Respect to future Wars, may we draw from the Determination of those Bounds? A Military Problem proposed. Conclusion - - - - -	277