

INDEX.

[In Part I. of this Work, the incidents are related in chronological order; and in Part II., according to a systematic arrangement indicated in the headings of the several Chapters. By a reference to the Contents at the commencement of Volume I., any historical event, or the description of a particular locality may be readily found. The Index is intended as a guide to incidental notices throughout these Volumes; and, to render it more complete, all noblemen mentioned merely by their titles in the course of the Work, are here distinguished from one another by their proper names, and other individuals generally by some distinctive title or description.]
