Books of enduring scholarly value

Classics

From the Renaissance to the nineteenth century, Latin and Greek were compulsory subjects in almost all European universities, and most early modern scholars published their research and conducted international correspondence in Latin. Latin had continued in use in Western Europe long after the fall of the Roman empire as the lingua franca of the educated classes and of law, diplomacy, religion and university teaching. The flight of Greek scholars to the West after the fall of Constantinople in 1453 gave impetus to the study of ancient Greek literature and the Greek New Testament. Eventually, just as nineteenth-century reforms of university curricula were beginning to erode this ascendancy, developments in textual criticism and linguistic analysis, and new ways of studying ancient societies, especially archaeology, led to renewed enthusiasm for the Classics. This collection offers works of criticism, interpretation and synthesis by the outstanding scholars of the nineteenth century.

The Alps of Hannibal

Controversial for centuries, the route across the Alps taken by Hannibal, his Carthaginian army and his famous elephants in 218 BCE formed the basis of an extended scholarly dispute between William John Law (1786–1869) and Robert Ellis (1819/20–85). Fought in the pages of books and the Journal of Classical and Sacred Philology, their exchanges lasted several years. Ellis' Treatise on Hannibal's Passage of the Alps (1853) and An Enquiry into the Ancient Routes between Italy and Gaul (1867) are also reissued in this series. Published in 1866, this two-volume work was Law's major contribution to the debate, examining the various theories and historical accounts. Modern scholarship has questioned, however, whether either man was right. Volume 2 examines the writings of Livy, comparing them to those of Polybius and determining which of the two can be deemed to be the more reliable. Law then draws his final conclusions.

Cambridge University Press has long been a pioneer in the reissuing of out-of-print titles from its own backlist, producing digital reprints of books that are still sought after by scholars and students but could not be reprinted economically using traditional technology. The Cambridge Library Collection extends this activity to a wider range of books which are still of importance to researchers and professionals, either for the source material they contain, or as landmarks in the history of their academic discipline.

Drawing from the world-renowned collections in the Cambridge University Library and other partner libraries, and guided by the advice of experts in each subject area, Cambridge University Press is using state-of-the-art scanning machines in its own Printing House to capture the content of each book selected for inclusion. The files are processed to give a consistently clear, crisp image, and the books finished to the high quality standard for which the Press is recognised around the world. The latest print-on-demand technology ensures that the books will remain available indefinitely, and that orders for single or multiple copies can quickly be supplied.

The Cambridge Library Collection brings back to life books of enduring scholarly value (including out-of-copyright works originally issued by other publishers) across a wide range of disciplines in the humanities and social sciences and in science and technology.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME SECOND,

PART VIII.

KNOWLEDGE OF THE ALPS IN EARLY TIMES.

	PAGE
CHAP. I.—Strabo on the Alps. His allusion to Polybius and Hannibal. Doubtful that he wrote the three words. Improbable that the four Passes were named by Polybius. Errors of M. Letronne	1
CHAP. II.—The Salassian hyperbasis of Strabo	13
CHAP. III.—The Taurinian hyperbasis of Strabo, being also the Medullian of Mr. Ellis.—On the Medulli of the Dictionary of Geography , 1856	16
CHAP. IV.—Polybius knew no Taurinian hyperbasis. The Po of Polybius	28
CHAP. V.—The Po and the Doria of Strabo: Lib. IV. p. 203	35
CHAP. VI.—The Po and Doria of Strabo: Lib. V. p. 217	44
CHAP. VII.—Mr. Ellis on the early use of the Little Mont Cenis. His appeal to Ammianus Marcellinus	52

CHAP. VIII.—Mr. Ellis on the Little Mont Cenis. His appeal to the Peutingerian Table	57
CHAP. IX.—Mr. Ellis on the Mont Cenis. His appeal to Cæsar's march from the Inner to the Outer Province . . .	76

PART IX.

INTERPRETATION OF LIVY.

CHAP. I.—Introduction. Passage of the Rhone. March to the Island. Livy's hypothesis on the Pass. Usually interpreted as the Genève, latterly as the Cenis. Tenets of the Cenisians on the Island and the Allobroges. Larauza. Ukert. Ellis	101
CHAP. II.—March from the Isère. The turn to the left, a fact variously dealt with, by numerous translators. I believe that the text wants no mending for telling the author's meaning	116
CHAP. III.—The march continued. Tricastini. Vocontii. Tricorii. D'Anville and Letronne are both right in thinking that Livy, in naming these peoples, intended an ascent by Briançon to the Genève. But each commits great mistake in his mode of reaching that town	126
CHAP. IV.—Druentia is the Durance. According to Mr. Whitaker it is the Arve. According to Mr. Tytler, it is the Dranse. According to the three Cenisians, it is the Drac	135
CHAP. V.—The Durance being conclusive of the Genève, identity of tracks is disproved. Livy diverged from Polybius at the Isère; thence to the first Alps there is utter dissonance both in incidents and topography. In the Alps Livy copies incidents from Polybius: topography there is none. Ascent. Summit, where Mr. Ellis attempts conciliation. Descent. Livy's own argument will belong to the ulterior question of preference	144

Contents. vii

PART X.

TWO PECULIAR THEORIES.

	PAGE
CHAP. I.—1. Theory of M. le Comte de Fortia D'Urban, whose route never tends to the Isère	157
CHAP. II.—Of M. Replat. This work, having been controverted by me in a pamphlet, written at Aix-les-Bains, in August, 1854, and republished in London in 1855, will be shortly adverted to, but to give it again at length, would be superfluous	162

PART XI.

CONCILIATION FAILS. QUESTION OF PREFERENCE.

CHAP. I.—We must select between the two historians. Their general reputation. Polybius had better access to facts. Livy's facts bear against his hypothesis. We learn from him that the prevailing belief was in a descent by the valley of Aosta; and that an early writer of celebrity had named the Pass of Cremona. He avoids to name Polybius	167
CHAP. II.—Livy founds his hypothesis on the words of Cincius, inferring that the Taurini lay in the line of Hannibal's march to the Cisalpine Gauls. The inference is unsound. Salassi. Libui. Explanation by Gibbon. Version of Ukert. Version of Ellis. On the notion of placing Turin in the line of march	181
CHAP. III.—No writer prior to Livy favours his hypothesis. We find some evidence in Sallust and Cornelius Nepos, tending in favour of the Little St. Bernard. Writers after Livy give no light. Silius Italicus. Pliny. Appian. Ammianus Marcellinus	198

PART XII.

CAUSE OF DOUBT. CONCLUSION.

	PAGE
CHAP. I.—Doubt has come through neglect of Polybius. D'Anville failed, in ignorance of Polybius. Gibbon failed, in deference to D'Anville. Niebuhr did not fail. Melville had unveiled the Truth: and De Luc had proclaimed it, adding fresh light	211
CHAP. II.—Arnold recognised the Truth: and might have extinguished Doubt. Not giving to Polybius the credit of showing him the Truth, he blamed him where he should have commended him. Conclusion	220

APPENDIX.
