CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

Inutility of Biography—Various views of management and various managers—Lord Byron and Mr. Robins—Receipts to Kean's first appearance—Mr. Henry Harris—Mr. R. Shell—Mr. C. Kemble—Mr. Elliston—King George and King Robert—Break up of the old understanding between the two Theatres—and its consequences—Mr. Price and Mr. Bish—A bad actor a bad bargain—The American Stage the ruin of the English Stage—Advantages of utility—Curious illustration thereof—Combination of Kean and Young in tragedy, and Liston and Matthews in comedy—Ingredients of an utilitarian—Failure of the theatres the fault of the public—Sir Robert Walpole, and his medical advisers...

Page

CHAPTER II.

Indifference of the public to theatrical amusements—Advantages possessed by the Foreign stage—Consequent cultivation of the art—A few singers do not constitute an Opera—Difficulties under which the large theatres labour—Folly of reduced prices—Necessity of reduced salaries—Lord
CONTENTS.

Chamberlain—Difference between authority and oppression—Sir E. L. Bulwer and the Marquis Conyngham—Licences to be had for asking—Hardship on the Haymarket theatre complained of by the manager to the public—The Duke of Sussex’s opinion of the proper support of the London Stage . . . . . . . . . 32

CHAPTER III.

Performers and their salaries, past and present—Their departure under different circumstances—The article of engagement of a leading actor, and its mutual advantages—Consequences of befriending a performer—James Smith and the Zoological Gardens—Horses and Actors, managed by old Astley—Cox versus Kean—Singular letter—Salaries of Mathews, Munden, Fawcett, Quick, Edwin, Irish Johnstone, C. Kemble, Macready, Ellen Tree, compared with those of Farren, Liston, Power, George Cooke, John Kemble, Mrs. Jordan—Different notions of comfort—Actors the destruction of dramatic literature—Knowles—Bulwer—Colman—Inchbald—Merton—Reynolds, &c. . . . 52

CHAPTER IV.

A London manager as he is, and as he ought to be—The conceit of authors and actors contrasted—Times when theatres were prosperous—Garrick’s salary and season—“Orders” the cause of all kinds of dis-orders—The press and its privileges—Difference of value in paper and other currency—Disadvantages of people not paying for their admission—Increase of newspapers—A favour no boon—Individual opinion founded on general criticism—Disadvantages of steam to a theatre—Success and talent not synonymous—Reasons why no one ever should be a manager 74
CHAPTER V.

The value of experience exemplified—The general result of all prosecutions—The Garrick Club—What it ought to effect, and what it does—Thomas Campbell's reception in it—Singular success leading to singular disaster—Kean and Macready's Shakspalian language—Madame Malibran's mind defined in her correspondence—Mr. Hackett and Mr. George Colman—Mr. Dowton's opinion of American editions of English plays—Mr. Kean's death, and his last appearance preceding it—Union of the two Patent theatres—Causes, or rather reasons, for its necessity

Page 91

CHAPTER VI.

A good address very desirable—Mr. Henry Harris's opinion of the author's—Opposition to it—Mr. Bulwer and his Bill—The Duke of Gloucester—False reports likely to lead to other reports—The Duke of Wellington's favourite maxim—Symptoms of hostilities—Mr. Sheridan Knowles, and his "co-mates in exile"—Memorial to His Majesty, and its gracious reception—Different views taken by different authors—The King a better judge than his subjects—Two theatres better than nineteen, in an undramatic city, logically discussed—A trip to Paris

Page 107

CHAPTER VII.

Memoirs of a Manager during a Continental trip—Terms on which to meet a bad dramatist—French honour, and its reward—Opinions on the novelties of the day—Mademoiselle
CONTENTS.

Falcon and Madame Vestris—Death of a celebrated theatrical character—A man can never be drowned who is born to be hanged—Mr. Braham and his talent for anecdote—Opening of the patent theatres after their union—Free List—Some on it “more free than welcome”—John Barnett and John Bull—Musical genius—First effects of the grand junction, and its overflow ........ 124

CHAPTER VIII.

Ambassadors—foreign and otherwise—Advantages of a tout ensemble—the decline of Pantomime, the cause, and the loss supplied—A humorous instance of stage direction—Gustave and St. George—Ducrow’s parrot, and the Hebrew Melodies—Count D’Orsay and Mr. Kenney—Mr. Farren and Prince Talleyrand—Cabinets of St. James’s and the Tuileries—The case of a wig—The best way to cut a play—Alarm at the prospect of war allayed—William Godwin—Sardanapalus—Lord Byron, Mrs. Mardyn—Mr. Moore—Mister William Dimond ........ 141

CHAPTER IX.

Jephtha’s Vow—a rash one—How to make a splendid fortune—The Lord Chamberlain in a dilemma—Three kings—one real one, and two dummies—Mr. Braham and Mr. Macready—Mr. Liston and His Majesty—“ego et rex meus”—The Page and the Peer—A good performer a bad judge—Captain Fitzclarence and his mother—How, in reality, to cast a play of Shakspeare, and to lay out a stage—Difference between profit and expenditure—House of Lords—Marquis of Clan-
CONTENTS.

Page

CHAPTER X.

A visit to Germany, and its theatres—Advantages of a Dutch town—Meat regulated by quantity rather than quality—Arnheim—Lord Howick—Mrs. Trollope's ideas of comfort—Professor Livius at Dusseldorf—The value of Kings and Kings' bones—the Rhine a case of Rhino—A touch of Poetry—Distance between the "dict of worms," and a cold chicken—singular rencontre of three singular characters—Studying German—Heidelberg and its glories—Strasburgh and its pâtés—Mr. Charles Kemble—Reduced prices, and their consequences—Young actors in Shakespeare's plays—Mr. Forrest—Mr. Murray—Mr. Bishop—Manfred—The Morning Chronicle—Payne Collier—Pierce Egan . . . 197

CHAPTER XI.

Dissolution—Difference between a capital fellow and a fellow of capital—Mr. Stanfield and Mr. Ducrow—Family borrowings—Mr. Farren and a distinguished nobleman—Additional verses to a popular song—Death and drunkenness—Sir Robert Peel and the Patent Theatres—A distinction between ways and means—Mr. Poole and the horn blower—Death of Mathews—Italian airs—Laporte's opinion of them in a letter—Bunn's opinion of them in a song—Malibran's engagement—Unprecedented terms—One man found to refuse what all the rest of mankind were trying to possess—A droll and a
CONTENTS.

XXXvi

CHAPTER XII.

"Repeal of the Union" carried—State of the dramatic world examined—An actor's theory and practice at variance—His former and present salaries at greater variance—Horne Tooke's opinion of expedition—Industrious fleas—No unanimity—Shakespeare neglected for want of actors—Demonstration of the rents of yesterday and to-day—Reduction of prices, and vitiation of taste—List of Company—Macbeth's music—Othello's attraction—A tragedian proves his own want of it—An article of engagement—The Jew, and the Jewess—Mr. Balfe—The Provost of Bruges—Distinction between a tuck-hunter and a tuft-hunter . . . . 259