Even before the Civil War, American writers were imagining life after a massive global catastrophe. For many, the blank slate of the American continent was instead a wreckage-strewn wasteland, a new world in ruins. Bringing together epic and lyric poems, fictional tales, travel narratives, and scientific texts, Postapocalyptic Fantasies in Antebellum American Literature reveals that US authors who enthusiastically celebrated the myths of primeval wilderness and virgin land also frequently resorted to speculations about the annihilation of civilizations, past and future. By examining such postapocalyptic fantasies, this study recovers an antebellum rhetoric untethered to claims for historical exceptionalism – a patriotic rhetoric that celebrates America while denying the United States a unique position outside of world history. As the scientific field of natural history produced new theories regarding biological extinction, geological transformation, and environmental collapse, American writers responded with wild visions of the ancient past and the distant future.

John Hay is an assistant professor of English at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas.
CAMBRIDGE STUDIES IN AMERICAN LITERATURE AND CULTURE

Editor
Ross Posnock, Columbia University

Founding Editor
Albert Gelpi, Stanford University

Advisory Board
Alfred Bendixen, Texas A&M University
Sacvan Bercovitch, Harvard University
Ronald Bush, St. John’s College, University of Oxford
Wai Chee Dimock, Yale University
Albert Gelpi, Stanford University
Gordon Hutner, University of Illinois, Urbana–Champaign
Walter Benn Michaels, University of Illinois, Chicago
Kenneth Warren, University of Chicago

Recent books in this series

164. JOHN HAY
Postapocalyptic Fantasies in Antebellum American Literature

163. PAUL JAUSSEN
Writing in Real Time: Emergent Poetics from Whitman to the Digital

162. JUSTINE MURISON
The Politics of Anxiety in Nineteenth-Century American Literature

161. HSUAN L. HSU
Geography and the Production of Space in Nineteenth-Century American Literature

160. DORRI BEAM
Style, Gender, and Fantasy in Nineteenth-Century American Women’s Writing

159. YOGITA GOYAL
Romance, Diaspora, and Black Atlantic Literature

158. MICHAEL CLUNE
American Literature and the Free Market, 1945–2000

157. KERRY LARSON
Imagining Equality in Nineteenth-Century American Literature

(continued after index)
POSTAPOCALYPTIC FANTASIES
IN ANTEBELLUM AMERICAN LITERATURE

JOHN HAY

University of Nevada, Las Vegas
Contents

List of Illustrations
Acknowledgments

Introduction: A New World in Ruins
The Postapocalyptic Fantasy: Semi-Secular Timescapes
Accelerated Decrepitude: Rapid Progress and Premature Aging in the New Republic
Proleptic Historiography: America’s Future Archaeologists and Postapocalyptic Historians
Uncanny Historicism: Speculative Realism in Frontier Travel
Science Faction: Natural History and Postapocalyptic Fantasy

1 The American Noah
American Antiquity: James Kirke Paulding and the Native Noah
Descent from Ararat: Crossing the Alleghenies in Paulding’s The Backwoodsman
An Antebellum Antediluvian: Surviving the Flood

2 Narratives of Extinction and the Last Man
Witness to Extinction: The Last Man
The Last Man in America: James Fenimore Cooper’s Adaptation
A Nation in Ruins: Who Is the Last of the Mohicans?
Après Moi le Déluge: Coming to Terms with Cooper’s The Crater

3 The Magnificent Mound Builders
Mounds Mania: The Ancient Heartland Empire
Breaking the Form of “The Prairies”: William Cullen Bryant’s Archaeological Sublime
All Abuzz: Nature, Artifice, and the Humble Bee
Managing the Landscape: Bryant among the Trees

4 History Unearthed
New Views: The Postapocalyptic Topographies of Domestic Travel Writing
Contents

The American Holy Land: John Lloyd Stephens’s Mayan Excursions 154

The Step-Mother World: Hawthorne’s “New Adam and Eve” in Postapocalyptic Boston 166

Conclusion 173

5 Contact at Ktaadn 175

- Ruins Already: Thoreau’s Tocquevillian Epiphany 180
- The Dustbin of History: Thoreau, Parkman, and the Northern Frontier 190
- Contact! Carnac!: A Week on Ktaadn and the Merrimack River 197
- Conclusion: Footprints in the Sand 205

Conclusion: The Revolutionary Ruins of the New West 213

Postapocalyptic Postscript 224

Frequently Cited Works 229

Index 235
Illustrations

I.1 Hubert Robert, Imaginary View of the Grand Gallery of the Louvre in Ruins (1796) page 21
1.1 Thomas Doughty, Ruins in a Landscape (1828) 44
2.1 Illustration from James Fenimore Cooper, The Crater or Vulcan’s Peak: A Tale of the Pacific (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin and Company, 1884), ii 105
2.2 Thomas Cole, The Course of Empire: Desolation (1836) 107
3.1 Great Mound at Grave Creek, from E. G. Squier and E. H. Davis, Ancient Monuments of the Mississippi Valley (Washington: Smithsonian, 1848), 169 121
3.2 The Seal of the Massachusetts Historical Society, pre 1900 132
4.1 Idol, at Copan, from Frederick Catherwood, Views of Ancient Monuments in Central America, Chiapas, and Yucatan (London, 1844), Plate I 162
5.1 Frederic Edwin Church, Mt. Ktaadn (1853) 192
C.1 George N. Barnard, Ruins of the Railroad Depot, Charleston, South Carolina (1866) 215
Acknowledgments

This project has received much support over the years, for which I am very thankful. At an earlier stage, a Bancroft Dissertation Award from Columbia University allowed me to write and rewrite toward publication. A W. M. Keck Foundation Fellowship at the Huntington Library and a Lillian Gary Taylor Fellowship at the University of Virginia Library gave me opportunities to conduct archival research during the summers. A generous, six-month American Council of Learned Societies Fellowship allowed me to finish the book.

I have received helpful advice and useful commentary from many friends and mentors. I appreciate the guidance offered to me by Andrew Delbanco, Ross Posnock, and Bruce Robbins at Columbia. Their sustained support has been tremendously reassuring. Jonathan Arac and Branka Arsić have also provided counsel and encouragement at crucial moments. For their valuable feedback on various sections and drafts, I would like to thank Katherine Biers, Jean-Christophe Cloutier, Sarah Cole, Nick Dames, Anne Diebel, Tim Donahue, Michael Golston, Sharon Marcus, Alastair Morrison, Donald Pease, Cristobal Silva, Adam Spry, Kate Stanley, Ezra Tawil, and Lindsay Van Tine. I feel especially grateful for the help of Michael West, who not only gave impetus to this project many years ago but remains the book’s most assiduous reader.

My colleagues at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, have offered advice, support, and camaraderie. Richard Harp and Anne Stevens welcomed me into the English Department and have since imparted indispensable guidance. I am especially thankful for the attention and assistance provided by my colleagues in American literary studies: Lezlie Cross, Eryn Green, Jane Hafen, Julia Lee, Brandon Manning, Vince Perez, Emily Setina, and Gary Totten. I also appreciate the work of Priscilla Finley and Yuko Shinozaki, of the UNLV libraries, who helped me to track down hard-to-find sources.
I feel lucky to have been able to rely on so many friends for encouragement. Patrick Rigney offered clutch copy editing and endless supplies of pop-cultural references. Bill Baros, Tom Buckler, and Dan Buckler chimed in with unwavering enthusiasm for all things postapocalyptic. This project owes as much to their jocular commentary as it does to any other sources. And I am very grateful for the help and guidance I have received from Ray Ryan, Edgar Mendez, Joanna Breeze, and Karthik Orukaimani at Cambridge University Press.

My family has always provided me with unflagging support. My brother Paul offered both common sense and classical expertise. My wife, Jessica Teague, has been uncannily understanding — of the material and of the writer. Her scholarly eye has vastly improved both. And my biggest supporters have always been my parents, Jack and Charlene, who are the best teachers and role models I have ever known. This book is dedicated to them.